Mr. ALDRICH. I present a memorial of the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers, protesting against any change in the tariff act of 1890, particularly in Schedule K of that act, relating to wool and woolens. In view of the importance of the subject and the representative character of the organization, I ask that the memorial, which is short, may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator that he have the memorial printed as a document. We ought not to encumber the RECORD with memorials.

Mr. ALDRICH. The memorial is upon a very important subject and from a representative organization; it is very short; and I trust that the Senator from Tennessee will not object to its being read.

Mr. HARRIS. The precedent is a very bad one, to encumber the RECORD with various memorials. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SHERMAN (to Mr. ALDRICH). Have it printed as a document.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the memorial be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be printed as a document, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Haynes, secretary, composed of business firms employing an active business capital of more than $50,000,000, praying that Congress will at its present session enact legislation securing the prompt construction of the Nicaragua Maritime Canal under the control of the United States Government. I beg permission to say that the association is composed of many representative citizens of the State, representing its varied interests, and as the memorial is short and concise, I should be glad to have it read as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from California?

Mr. HARRIS. I object for the reason suggested a while ago; and if one Senator is allowed to put into the RECORD a memorial he receives from his constituents, every other Senator will be criticised if he does not follow up that practice. Our RECORD is vastly too voluminous now. I am bound to object to the printing of the memorial in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the memorial will be printed as a document, if the Senator from California so desires.

Mr. FELTON. I ask that it be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana. I present resolutions adopted by the New Orleans Board of Trade, of which F. J. Odendahl is president, Louis Rush, Pearl White, and James J. Schmidt are vice-presidents, and Hy H. Smith is secretary. They invoke the aid of the Senators and Representatives from Louisiana towards the defeat of the bill recently introduced into the Senate by the Senator from Minnesota [MR. WASHBURN], defining options in futures, and imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and for other purposes. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF TROPHIES OF THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I beg leave to present a communication written by our minister to Mexico. It was addressed to my late distinguished predecessor, but reached here after his death. I ask that it may be read and referred to the appropriate committee. I do not know that I endorse the view expressed, but I ask that the communication may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the communication?

Mr. HARRIS. Is it a memorial?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a communication from the United States minister to Mexico, addressed to the predecessor of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be read.

DECEMBER 19, 1891.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It has been suggested that it would be a generous and neighborly act on the part of the United States to return to Mexico the trophies of war we captured from her armies in the war of 1847.

Whatever may be the sentiment among our people regarding the justice or necessity of that invasion of more than forty years ago, it is believed they would heartily approve Congressional action giving the Executive such authority.

Mexico is our sister, our next-door neighbor, and, excepting our own, the greatest nation on this hemisphere, with whom it is desirable in every way that we promote friendly relations.

To return her the arms we captured in that war would illustrate on our part a neighborly spirit that would be appreciated and would do much to remove lingering prejudices.

If you think well of it, and find the President, Mr. Blaine, and the Senators favorably disposed, I trust you will take appropriate action in the matter.

Very sincerely, yours,

THOMAS RYAN.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To what committee shall the communication be referred?

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution ordering the Joint Committee on Printing to examine into the errors in the Index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the present session of Congress.

INTERNATIONAL BIMETALLIC AGREEMENT.

Mr. TELLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 24) to provide for an international bimetallic agreement; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the joint resolution may be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the determined policy of the United States Government to use both gold and silver as full legal-tender money under the ratio now existing in the United States, or that may be hereafter established by the United States alone, or acting in accord with other nations; that the President shall invite the governments of the countries comprising the Latin Union, so called, and of such other nations as he may deem advisable, to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver, for the purpose of establishing, internationally, the use of bimetallic money and securing fixity of relative value between those metals, such conference to be held at such place as may be mutually agreed upon by the executives of the governments joining in the same, whenever the governments so invited, or any three of them, shall have signified their willingness to unite in the same, and when, in the judgment of the President a sufficient number of nations shall have entered into such international arrangement, he may declare the ratio so fixed to be the existing ratio in the United States, and all coinage thereafter shall be at such ratio until changed by law.

The President shall, by and with the advice of the Senate, appoint not less than three nor more than five commissioners, who shall attend such conference on behalf of the United States, and shall report the doings thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress. Said commissioners shall receive the sum of $5,000 and their reasonable expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of State; and the amount necessary to pay such compensation and expenses is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to ask the action of the Senate on the joint resolution without its going to the regular committee, but I do desire to call the attention of the Committee on Finance to this measure.

On the 11th of July, 1890, I presented to the Senate and had referred to the Committee on Finance a resolution almost exactly the same as this. It slumbered in that committee until the session closed. I am not overconfident that this joint resolution will receive any other attention than the former. We are told repeatedly that everybody in this country who is not in favor of free coinage is in favor of the use of silver if it can be safely done, and that that can only be done through an international arrangement or agreement. As I said the other day, the opponents of free coinage have never yet taken any steps toward securing such an agreement, at least not since 1881. As the Finance Committee is now composed entirely either of men who are in favor of free coinage or all of them in favor of a bimetallic arrangement (and all free-coinage men are in favor of a bimetallic arrangement) it seems to me we ought to be able to get a report from that committee.

I wish to say, however, that while I believe in an international agreement, or I believe if that could be secured there would be no further difficulty with this question, I, for one, do not intend to rest my case entirely upon an international agreement. I am not prepared myself to surrender the effort to secure free coinage and a full recognition of silver in this country until an international agreement can be made. That is a step which the people who have opposed free coinage say ought to be taken. I give them now an opportunity to take it, and I will say for myself that I am not wedded to the wording of the joint resolution. I do not care how the thing is done; it must be done, to be of any value, by the action of the Government in an official way, not by sending a man here and a man there to discuss with European financiers this question; but we must give the world to understand that the Government of the United States is desirous of an international bimetallic arrangement or agreement, and more than that, we must give them to understand that whether we have an international agreement or whether we do not, we propose to use silver as money on equal terms with gold, either at the ratio that we have now established or at such ratio as we shall ultimately declare to be the proper one, whether it be 15½ or 20 to 1, or any other; but that on some ratio the people of the United States intend to use silver and gold as legal-tender money, and not silver as a subsidiary money only; that we propose to take the bullion now in the Treasury where it is threatening, I say, the stability of the bimetallic system all over the world, out of the category of a commodity and make it money.

I have made these remarks so that nobody should misunderstand me and believe that because I am in favor of a bimetallic agreement I think we ought to sit down and fold our arms until a bimetallic agreement is made, for I do not so believe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reference of the joint resolution does the Senator from Colorado desire?

Mr. TELLER. Let it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART. A few days ago I offered a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire what further legislation, if any, is necessary to secure free coinage. I have since that time looked further into the facts and prepared a short statement, which I shall either read or ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be read.

Mr. STEWART. I will read it, then.

From the foundation of the Government continuously the owner of silver bullion has been authorized to deposit the same at the several mints of the United States, to be coined either into standard dollars, trade dollars, or formed into bars for the benefit of the depositor.

There never has been any question of the right of the owner of silver bullion to deposit the same at the mint and receive the stamp of the Government for his benefit. The only question has been as to what kind of coin the Government would make for the depositor. Under the act of 1837 the silver bullion deposited was coined into standard dollars. Under the act of 1873 the silver bullion deposited could only be coined into trade dollars or formed into bars. Under the act of 1878 the standard silver dollar was restored, and it was enacted that it should be coined as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, since which time it is believed that the law has required the coinage of standard dollars for the benefit of the depositor.

The various provisions of the law relating to this matter are as follows:

The act of 1837 provides—

That gold and silver bullion brought to the mint for coinage shall be received and coined, by the proper officers, for the benefit of the depositor. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 5, p. 138, sec. 14.)

This law was modified by sections 15 and 21 of the act of Februaury 12, 1873. Section 15 of that act omitted the standard dollar from the list of coins and substituted the trade dollar therefor. Section 21 provided—

That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint, to be formed into bars, or into dollars of the weight of 420 grains, troy, designated in this act as trade dollars, and no deposit of silver for other coinage shall be received. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 17, p. 427.)

This provision continued the right, which had never been denied, of the owner of silver bullion to deposit for coinage for his benefit, and added thereto the additional privilege to have it formed into bars and stamped by the Government for his use.

It is true that the trade dollar was a useless coin, designed for export, and a legal tender for only $5. On the 22d of July, 1876, Congress passed a resolution the second section of which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That the trade dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 19, p. 215.)

The right of the owner of bullion to deposit the same to be formed into bars or coined into trade dollars still remained. The only effect of the section of the resolution above quoted was to limit the amount which might be so deposited to be coined into trade dollars. No limit or restriction was placed upon the right to deposit silver bullion to be formed into bars for the benefit of the depositor.

This was the state of the law when the act of February 28, 1878, was passed. The title of that act is significant as denoting a change of policy with regard to silver coinage. It is as follows:

An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character.

The act provides—

That there shall be coined, at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscriptions provided by said act; which coins, together with all silver coins heretofore coined by the United States, of like weight and fineness, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value, for all debts and dues public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 20, p. 25, sec. 1.)

Mark the language:

There shall be coined at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars * * * as provided in the act of January 18, 1837.

The question is, how were silver dollars coined under the act of 1837?

The fourteenth section of the act declares that they shall be coined for the benefit of the depositor. It was unnecessary to provide in the act of 1878 for the deposit of silver bullion at the mint to be manipulated for the benefit of the depositor. That was already the law. But it required the restoration of the silver dollar as a coin of the United States and a law authorizing its coinage, both of which were expressly provided for in the act of 1878. That act also gave the right to the depositor of silver bullion as authorized by the act of 1873 to have it coined into standard dollars.

We also find the following provision in the act of 1878:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase, from time to time, silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly, as fast as so purchased, into such dollars. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 20, p. 25, sec 1.)

It appears to have been supposed that the purchase provided for in the foregoing provision was the only means of procuring silver bullion for coinage, but no such conclusion is sustained by the language of the act. The requirement that bullion deposited shall be coined at the mint by the proper officers for the benefit of the depositor is unequivocal and positive, and is not qualified by anything that follows.

The provision above quoted authorizes, in addition to the coinage of such bullion as may be deposited, the purchase of bullion for coinage. Whatever may have been the reason for this additional purchase of bullion for coinage is immaterial so long as the act requiring bullion deposited to be coined for the benefit of the depositor is plain and unequivocal.

But it may be fairly assumed that in view of the resumption of specie payments in the following year after the passage of the act of 1878 that the United States desired to accumulate coin. Besides the silver dollar was worth a premium of over 3 per cent while the act of 1837 remained in force, because it contained more silver in proportion to gold than European coinage, our ratio being 16 to 1 and that of other commercial nations 15½ to 1.

But whatever may have been the intention of Congress the provision for the purchase of bullion for coinage did not in any way interfere with the plain language of the law which restored the standard silver dollar and commanded its coinage as provided in the act of 1837.

The repealing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, reads as follows:

That so much of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," as requires the monthly purchase and coinage of the same into silver dollars of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion, is hereby repealed. (U. S. Stat. at Large, vol. 26, p. 289, sec. 5.)

It will be observed that this act deals only with the purchase of bullion by the Government, and has no reference to the deposits of bullion by private parties to be manipulated by the Government into bars or into coin, which right was fully recognized and declared in the act of 1878.

If it should be suggested that the Treasury Department has not recognized the act of 1878 as a full restoration of the silver dollar and the right of the depositor to have silver bullion coined as provided in the act of 1873, it may be said in reply that the Treasury Department has been in favor of the single gold standard and opposed to the execution of any law recognizing silver as legal-tender money. The principal objection urged to the passage of the Bland act of 1878 was that it would be a violation of public faith and in derogation of the rights of the public creditor to provide for the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character. The two Houses of Congress, fifteen days before the passage of the Bland act, passed the following resolution:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act, were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, volume 7, part 1, page 627.

This resolution passed both Houses by more than a two-thirds vote, and in the preamble a full statement is contained of the obligations entered into by the United States in contracting the public debt which was outstanding at that time. The fact that the Treasury Department has deemed it its duty, whatever might be the law, to maintain the gold standard and pay the public debt in gold is a sufficient reason for a failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to coin silver into standard dollars for the benefit of the depositor; but such action furnishes no guide as a rule of construction. The failure to execute a law does not repeal it. The act of 1878 requiring silver bullion to be coined, as provided in the act of 1837, for the benefit of the depositor, is still in force. Besides, no silver bullion was deposited at the mint for coinage under the act of 1878 until within the past year. The question has probably never been considered by any Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the joint resolution been referred?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before it is referred I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I did not hear all the remarks of the Senator from Nevada, but I wish to know from him if he is quite sure, having examined the matter carefully, that the act of 1890 does not repeal that portion of the act of 1878 which he claims, and perhaps correctly, revives the act of 1837.

Mr. STEWART. It certainly does not. It only repeals a specific portion of the act, only that portion of it which provides for the purchase of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 of silver bullion per month to be coined into silver dollars. It recites the portions of the act which it does repeal and provides a substitute for the parts repealed, leaving the remainder in force, without being affected.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator presented any joint resolution to declare what is the state of the law upon this subject?

Mr. STEWART. I have presented a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Did that resolution pass the Senate?

Mr. STEWART. That resolution passed the Senate and is now before the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. An instruction to have the committee inquire?

Mr. STEWART. To inquire.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator whether any case has been made at the suit of any individual, by mandamus or otherwise, against the Secretary of the Treasury, to compel him to coin silver bullion.

Mr. STEWART. A suit has been instituted and it is pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, but it is uncertain when it will be reached. The parties are very anxious to press it. If the Government will facilitate the matter, it may be taken up at an early day to the Supreme Court of the United States, pro forma, for a final determination of the question, but whether this will be done or not I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN. From the reading of the memorandum the Senator has presented this morning I am satisfied he is correct in his conclusion that the law is and has been all the time that the citizen has the right to have silver dollars of 412½ grains coined at the mint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 25) for the relief of the children of John W. Judson, late agent of the United States at Oswego, N. Y., for public works on Lake Ontario; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VANCE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 26) to reappropriate and apply the amount appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, to pay certain Southern mail contractors; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PASCO, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Allson J. Tinsley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, under the rules.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry as to what legislation, if any, should be enacted by Congress for the purpose of relieving the Court of Claims in the transaction of business before that court, and for expediting such business, and to report to the Senate by bill or otherwise at its earliest convenience.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table, and I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow for the purpose of submitting a few remarks to show the necessity for some speedy legislation on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

TAXES ON STATE BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to report a bill repealing all taxes imposed by Congress on the circulation of State banks of issue.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD INDEX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution, this day received from the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and is hereby, ordered to examine into the errors in the Index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the present session of Congress, and, if possible to do so, to take such steps as will in the future remedy the defects and correct the errors therein.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 12, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 7, 1892, was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. In the last issue of the RECORD there appears a statement of the financial condition of the Treasury on the 1st day of January, in which I am made to say that "actual default" has been made in the sinking fund. I wish to say that the statement is incorrect. The sinking fund for the current fiscal year has in part been provided for, and, according to the estimate of the Secretary, will all be provided for, with possibly the exception of about $11,000,000. The aggregate of——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa arise?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I rise for the purpose of saying that if this is a correction of the RECORD I have no objection to the gentleman's statement. If the gentleman wishes to correct statements that he himself has made, I have objections. This is not the time for the gentleman to change his statements.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire, also, in this connection, Mr. Speaker, to correct the aggregate of the total of the outstanding liabilities——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a correction of the RECORD, but that it is a change of the original statement which the gentleman made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to state to the House that he was misquoted in the RECORD, or rather, misprinted.

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not understand him so to state.

Mr. DOCKERY. "The gentleman" does not state that. He simply states that he was in error in stating that there had been default in the sinking fund.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then he is correcting his own error, and not correcting any error in the RECORD of the debate the other day.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly. I also desire to state that instead of the aggregate——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that if he was misquoted in the RECORD it is his privilege to correct it, but the Chair thinks that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is correct in the position that it is not the privilege of the gentleman at this time to change his own statement, provided it was correctly recorded.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is not willing to allow me to correct the statement, I will wait until a more opportune time.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. If the gentleman from Missouri will change his whole speech, I will consent to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. "The gentleman from Missouri" would be very glad to change his whole speech if the facts would justify it; but the statement to which the "gentleman from Missouri" desired and desires to advert is something that the gentleman from Iowa apparently does not wish to hear.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, that by unanimous consent, leave be given to the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Iowa both to make statements in reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire——

Mr. DOCKERY. I only desired to avail myself of the usual courtesy extended to members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I object unless the gentleman from Missouri comes within the rule. I am willing to allow him to do so if he will allow me to make a statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing both the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Iowa to make statements in regard to the matter? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I only want it understood that when the gentleman makes his statement I will claim the right to discuss his entire statement. Let there be no misunderstanding about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Missouri what time he desires in which to make his statement.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I desire also to be heard in reply to any statement the gentleman from Iowa may make unless he confines himself to the issues which I propose to discuss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks this may be properly adjudicated by having an understanding with the House as to the length of time which each gentleman shall occupy.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Let the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] have an hour and I will take an hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I object to the devoting of an hour to any such purpose. Neither of these gentlemen has spoken loud enough so that we could understand what they were talking about, but, as I understand, it is a matter in relation to the correction of the RECORD. I object to the consumption of two hours' time for that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution heretofore adopted allowing the introduction and reference of bills be extended to to-day, and that the call of the States be now proceeded with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] asks unanimous consent that the resolution heretofore adopted for the introduction of bills, resolutions, etc., be extended to to-day, there being a number of gentlemen who were unable to present their bills when the call of States occurred the other day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECIPROCITY PROCLAMATIONS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I would like to send to the desk a resolution that I ask to have read, and of which I ask immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report. After the resolution is read the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would be well enough first to execute the order already granted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This requires unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from Maine object?

Mr. REED. But we have already had one unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. And it is proposed to supersede it by another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order, however, if the House sees fit to consider it. Does the gentleman from Maine object?

Mr. REED. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of State, by the direction of the President, has written to the diplomatic representatives of Venezuela, Nicaragua, Colombia, Honduras, and other nations to the United States the following letter, to wit:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, D. C., January 7, 1892.

"SIR: I am directed by the President to again bring to your attention the provisions of the tariff law of the Congress of the United States approved March 1, 1890, in which provision was made for the admission into the United States free of all duty of the following articles, to wit: All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides. In section 3 of this law it is declared that these remissions of duty were made 'with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing' those articles; and it is provided that on and after January 1, 1892, 'whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw or uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country,' at the rates set forth in said section 3.

"I am further directed by the President to inform you that in view of the free introduction into the United States of the articles named, the product of Venezuela, he deems the duties imposed upon the agricultural and other products of the United States on their introduction into Venezuela to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, and that unless on or before March 15 next some satisfactory commercial arrangement is entered upon between the Government of the United States and the Government of Venezuela, or unless some action is taken by the latter Government whereby the unequal and unreasonable state of the trade relations between the two countries is removed, the President will on the date last named issue his proclamation suspending the provisions of the tariff law cited relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of Venezuela, and during such suspension the duties set forth in section 3 of said law shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from Venezuela.

In asking you to transmit to your Government the foregoing information I desire to repeat the assurance which has been given to you and your Government at various times since the enactment of the law cited, of the earnest desire of this Government to maintain with Venezuela the most intimate and friendly trade relations, and to express the hope that you may yet be empowered by your Government to enter with me upon a commercial arrangement reciprocally equal and mutually advantageous.

"JAMES G. BLAINE.

"To Señor Don NICANOR BOLET-PERAZA,
"Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Venezuela."

And whereas the act of the President therein threatened, if carried out, would impose taxes upon the citizens of the United States—put obstacles in the growth of commerce between the United States and such nations, and give undue advantage to certain persons engaged in the purchase and sale of similar commodities upon which duties would be thus imposed, and which act of the President would be unconstitutional, onerous, and unjust: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and is hereby, instructed to report, on or before the 25th of February, a bill repealing the third section of the act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and enacting in lieu thereof the following, viz:

"The President of the United States is hereby authorized, without further legislation, to declare the ports of the United States free and open to all the products of any nation of the American hemisphere upon which no export duties are imposed, whenever and so long as such nation shall admit to its ports, free of all national, provincial (State), municipal, and other taxes, flour, corn meal, and other breadstuffs, preserved meats, fish, vegetables, and fruits, cotton-seed oil, rice, and other provisions, including all articles of food, lumber, furniture, and all other articles of wood, agricultural implements and machinery, mining and mechanical machinery, structural steel and iron, steel rails, locomotives, railway cars and supplies, street cars, refined petroleum, or such other products of the United States as may be agreed upon."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BURROWS. I object to its consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the introduction of this resolution for reference?

Mr. BURROWS. It had better be taken in the regular order under the call of States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer the preamble and resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that can be done under the general call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills.

Before entering on the call of States and Territories the Chair desires to lay before the House the following executive and other communications, which will be referred under the rules.

REDEMPTION OF PAPER CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, inviting the attention of Congress to a clipping from the annual report of the Treasurer recommending the free transportation of paper currency to Washington for redemption; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN MILWAUKEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of his letter to the First Comptroller, submitting certain questions which have arisen in connection with the sale of property known as the United States custom-house and post-office site and building in Milwaukee, Wis.; also reply of First Comptroller, asking for appropriation to pay rent for fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting report of the inspections of the money account of the disbursing officers of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there are voluminous documents accompanying this report, which the Chair thinks should not be printed; and if there be no objection there will be no order made for the printing of the documents. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PORT DAY, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, the report of the examination and survey of Port Day, above Niagara Falls, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking for an appropriation for the subsistence of the Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIANS NOT HAVING TREATY FUNDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the expenditures for food and other necessities of life among the Indians not having treaty funds; on open market purchases made during the fiscal year in excess of $500; and on receipts and expenditures of Indian money "Proceeds of labor," for 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WARM SPRING RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the commission appointed under the act of August 19, 1890, as to correct location of northern line of Warm Spring Reservation, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of findings of fact in the cases of Alexander Davis against the United States, William A. Carr against the United States, John C. Middlekauff (deceased) against the United States, William H. Hughes, administrator of the estate of David Unsell (deceased) against the United States, and John C. Bailey against the United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SUPERINTENDENT OF FREE DELIVERY.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the salary of the superintendent of free delivery in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. I think the resolution should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I desire to make a statement. Will the gentleman from Texas hear a statement from me? This is——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A statement can only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to make a statement pertaining to the resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the office of superintendent of free delivery in the Post-Office Department is an office which is as fixed and permanent as that of the Postmaster-General. The salary—$3,000 a year—has been fixed by law and has stood at that amount for a long number of years. When the appropriation bill in the last Congress was prepared and passed in this House the usual appropriation of $3,000 to pay this officer was included in the bill, but in the Senate, by a mistake in the enrolling of the bill, the appropriation for the payment of that salary was omitted, and the officer has been performing his duties since last June without pay. Now, inasmuch as this resolution creates no new office and adds nothing to the burdens of the Government, but simply provides for paying an officer who is now performing his duties without pay, it seems to me that there should be no objection to its immediate passage. I may add, Mr. Speaker, that this is not an innovation in the practice of the House. In 1884 a resolution of like character was passed by unanimous consent to reimburse the Chief Stenographer, in consequence of a clerical error in the engrossment and enrollment of a bill. For these reasons it seems to me that no gentleman ought to object to the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it will not take more than twenty-four hours for the proper committee to investigate this matter and make a report, and I think the resolution had better be referred.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman objects, then I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will go there under the rules. Before the Chair proceeds to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution to which there will probably be no objection.

PORTRAITS OF EX-SPEAKERS GROW AND RANDOLPH.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That January 21, at 2 o'clock p. m., be set apart for presentation to the House of Representatives of the portraits of ex-Speakers Grow and Randall by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and that upon that occasion the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives of that State be admitted to the floor.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SIMPSON. I wish to introduce a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later, after executing the order for the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

The States and Territories were then called; when bills and joint resolutions were presented, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

TORREY BANKRUPT BILL.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce what is known as the Torrey bankrupt bill. I introduce it at the request of the distinguished author of the bill.

COINAGE, NATIONAL CURRENCY, ETC.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 2629) for the free coinage of gold and silver; for the issue of gold and silver certificates; for the issue of and for an increase in the issue of Treasury notes; for the retirement of national-bank notes and for the repeal of all laws for the sale of bonds and for the accumulation of a gold reserve, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. McRAE. The Chair, on examination of the bill, will find that either of two committees might have jurisdiction of it. I ask the reference of the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as the greater part of the bill deals with questions of which that committee properly takes cognizance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the bill embraces matter which, if taken separately, would perhaps go to any one of three committees. The gentleman from Arkansas asks the reference of the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BLAND. What is the title of the bill?

The title was then read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that in view of the matters embraced in the bill it would be referable to either the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures, or the Committee on Banking and Currency. The question is on the reference suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BLAND. The bill provides, as I understand, for coinage of gold and silver and for the issue of paper money representing coin or bullion. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which appears to be the appropriate reference.

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that suggestion, though it occurred to me that the Committee on Banking and Currency would be the proper reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

RELIEF OF PURCHASERS SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer, by request, the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk, to authorize an inquiry as to the cost of Rock Creek Park, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The preamble and resolution were read, as follows:

Whereas Congress did, on the 27th day of September, 1890, pass an act entitled "An act authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia;" and

Whereas by the terms of said act it was, among other things, provided that the cost of said park, including all expenses incident to the location and establishing of the same, should not exceed the sum of $1,200,000; and

Whereas commissioners have been appointed to locate said park and make purchase of the real estate to be embraced therein, and said commissioners have purchased and paid for a large tract of said land: and

Whereas appraisers have also been appointed to appraise the value of lands for said park not purchased by said commissioners; and

Whereas the amount paid by said commissioners and the aggregate amount of the awards determined to be paid by the said appraisers, taken together, are largely in excess of the sum of $1,200,000 appropriated for said park; and

Whereas the said commissioners and appraisers have been engaged for nearly one year last past in making condemnation of said land, as provided by said act, at great cost and expense to the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, directed to ascertain and report to this House:

First. The amount of money already paid out and expended by said commission and by the United States, under said act, in proceedings thus far had in locating and establishing said park.

Second. The amount of money, as near as may be, which it will be necessary to expend to complete the purchase of the land required by said act to be taken for said park.

Third. The amount of money, as near as may be, which will be required to make requisite and necessary improvements to complete said park.

Fourth. Whether or not it is desirable to include in said park a less amount of land than the number of acres selected and designated by said commissioners, viz, 1,980 acres of land.

Fifth. The amount of money already paid out and expended by said commission and by the United States in locating said park.

Sixth. Such other facts connected with the creation, location, and establishment of said park as may, in the opinion of said committee, be beneficial and important to be ascertained and reported to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rule this resolution should go to the Committee on Rules, but if the gentleman desires the reference which he has indicated the Chair will put the question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

MEMORIAL OF FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Mr. PIERCE asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following memorial:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6, 1892.

To the honorable the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, a committee elected by the supreme council of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, under its instructions and on its behalf, would most respectfully represent:

That the universal and unparalleled depression in all departments of our great agricultural industry has impressed the farmers of the United States with the gravest concern and alarm. That despite their fruitful soils, the favoring conditions of climate, their faithful application and courageous industry, and irrespective of seasons or harvests, their farms and the products of their labor are constantly and steadily depreciating in value. That the inspiriting hope of competency and comfort, as a reward for their toil, is vanishing in their earnest struggle for sustenance and the preservation of home. That patient, honest, and earnest investigation of this anomalous condition of affairs has impressed the farmers of the country with the solemn conviction that the evils which are thus clogging and paralyzing their energies are largely due to discriminating inequalities in our governmental policy and which are the legitimate outgrowth of partial and unfriendly legislation.

Your memorialists would further respectfully represent:

That in their organized capacity the farmers in thirty-eight States and Territories of the Union, after long and earnest deliberation and with remarkable unanimity, formulated and adopted a declaration of principles (an official copy of which is hereto appended) which they believe, if enacted into law, would restore agriculture to its true and just position among the great industries of the country, and would conserve the highest and best interests of the public good. That they respectfully, but most earnestly, commend to the patriotic consideration and favor of your honorable bodies the justice and wisdom of enacting such laws as will embody the principles enunciated in the declaration referred to.

Your memorialists would respectfully represent:

That they are specially charged to ask the attention of your honorable bodies to the great and urgent necessity for immediate legislative action for the financial relief of the industrial and business interests of the country. That they believe that the present financial system of the country is not only inherently defective, but that it is incompatible with the genius and spirit of our institutions, and is in conflict with the fundamental principles of our Government. That they believe that the system, born of the terrible exigencies of a mighty civil war, purely as a military expedient and necessity, which, while it doubtless saved the life of the nation in war, has been demonstrated, under the test of experience, not to be the system for preserving and perpetuating that life in peace. That they believe that a sacred and steadfast observance and maintenance of the powers and functions conferred upon the Government by the Constitution for making, issuing, and controlling the money of the people is absolutely essential to healthful and symmetrical development in our material progress, and that these powers and functions can not in any manner be relinquished or transferred without violence to equity and justice and gravest peril to the safety and liberties of the people. That they believe that the exclusive right secured to the Government by the Constitution to make money carries with it the unavoidable obligation and responsibility to supply it in such manner and amount as to meet at all times the requirements of the legitimate business of the country and of our growing country and trade. That they believe that the exercise of the legitimate and rightful functions of the Government in the control of money would obviate a recurrence of the ruinous effects of undue contraction in the volume, as demonstrated in the present depressed conditions, which are paralyzing the energies of the people in all departments of industrial enterprise. That they believe that all money should be issued direct by the Government to the people at a low rate of interest and in sufficient volume to meet the legitimate demands of the legitimate business of the country, on safe and valid securities, and that it should be a full legal tender for all debts. That they believe that silver should have all the rights in coinage and all the qualities of legal tender which gold possesses.

Your memorialists would further respectfully represent:

That those for whom they speak do not ask your honorable bodies to venture upon doubtful expedient or experiment, but respectfully and most earnestly present the deplorable and alarming financial condition of the agricultural interests of the country, with the hope that a remedy may be speedily sought and devised through which they may be relieved from impending bankruptcy and ruin, and which will secure to our people and to posterity the blessings of a permanent, just, and equitable financial system.

Respectfully submitted.

L. P. FEATHERSTONE,
National Legislative Committee of the N. F. A. and I. U.

Declaration of principles of the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union.

1. (a) We demand the abolition of national banks.

(b) We demand that the Government shall establish subtreasuries in the several States which shall issue money direct to the people at a low rate of tax, not to exceed 2 per cent per annum, on nonperishable farm products, and also upon real estate, with proper limitations upon the quantity of land and amount of money.

(c) We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.

2. We demand that Congress shall pass such laws as will effectually prevent the dealing in futures of all agricultural and mechanical productions, providing a stringent system of procedure in trials that will secure prompt conviction, and imposing such penalties as shall secure the most perfect compliance with the law.

3. We condemn the silver bill recently passed by Congress, and demand in lieu thereof the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

4. We demand the passage of laws prohibiting alien ownership of land, and that Congress take prompt action to devise some plan to obtain all lands now owned by foreign syndicates, and that all lands now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of such as is actually used and needed by them be reclaimed by the Government, and held for actual settlers only.

5. Believing in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, we demand—

(a) That our national legislation shall be so framed in the future as not to build up one industry at the expense of another.
(b) We further demand a removal of the existing heavy tariff tax from the necessities of life that the poor of our land must have.
(c) We further demand a just and equitable system of graduated tax on incomes.
(d) We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people, and hence we demand that all national and State revenues shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the Government economically and honestly administered.
6. We demand the most rigid, honest, and just State and national governmental control and supervision of the means of public communication and transportation, and if this control and supervision does not remove the abuses now existing, we demand the Government ownership of such means of communication and transportation.
7. We demand that the Congress of the United States submit an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people of each State.

DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLEN GOODS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the memorial which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the memorial, as follows:

Memorial of National Association of Wool Manufacturers against any change in the wool and woolen schedule of the tariff act of 1890.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]?

Mr. WISE. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the memorial.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A concurrent resolution to print 15,500 copies of the eleventh and twelfth annual reports of the Bureau of Ethnology—to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A concurrent resolution to print 15,500 copies of the thirteenth annual report of the Director of the Geological Survey—to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A concurrent resolution to print extra copies of the eighth annual report of the Civil Service Commission—to the Committee on Printing.

STATE BANK CIRCULATION.

By Mr. BOATNER: A bill (H. R. 2791) to repeal sections 3412 and 3413 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to repeal all laws imposing taxation on State bank circulation—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PINKERTON'S DETECTIVE AGENCY.

By Mr. WATSON: A resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the charter, the wages, the organization, and the purposes of the Pinkerton detective agency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WATSON. As the resolution involves a purely legal question, I ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the resolution seeks to extend the scope ordinarily given to one of the committees of the House, so as to enable it to investigate a particular question, the Chair regarded the resolution as one which should properly go to the Committee on Rules. However, if the gentleman desires to move the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Chair will entertain that motion.

Mr. WATSON. As the resolution presents a purely legal question, I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. CUTTING. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the memorial of the Traffic Association of California, praying a prompt construction of the Nicaragua Canal under control of the United States Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to printing this memorial in the RECORD? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I rose to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the request can not be entertained.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood the gentleman.

Mr. MCKENNA. The proposition was put to the House, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman from Iowa did not say one word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Iowa was standing for the purpose of making objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I rose for that purpose and addressed the Chair.

Mr. MCKENNA. Why, then, did you not object?

Mr. BUTLER. Because I was not recognized by the Chair at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa states that he addressed the Chair, though the Chair did not hear him.

Mr. MCKENNA. I will say to the gentleman that this is a memorial of the Traffic Association of California, an important public body. The request is that this memorial be printed in the RECORD. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BUTLER. If it be in order at all, we have petitions here from all classes of people and all kinds of resolutions. I see no reason why one petition or resolution should be printed instead of another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made and debate is not in order.

DEFICIENCY IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives the aggregate amount of unexpended appropriations on account of the fiscal year 1891, at the close of that fiscal year; also the amount of expenditures made during the first six months of the fiscal year 1892, giving the information for both periods in detail by specifying the amounts expended under each of the regular annual appropriation bills under deficiencies, under miscellaneous acts, and under permanent appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the resolution is not by any means broad enough to cover the facts in question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that it covers exactly the facts at issue between us——

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). Growing out of the remarks made by me a few days since and published in the RECORD of last Thursday. It calls for information as to the unexpended balance of appropriations for the fiscal year 1891——

Mr. DINGLEY. So far the gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it also calls for an exhibit of the expenditures for the first six months of the present fiscal year. When on the floor a few days since discussing the condition of the Treasury, January 1, 1892, I alleged—to which allegation I understand the gentleman from Maine takes exception as being inaccurate—that of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1891 (according to to the statement of the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations) $30,256,177.80 were yet unexpended. I also stated that $35,232,408.76 of appropriations for the present fiscal year were unexpended—that is, for the first half of the fiscal year.

Now, the inquiry which I seek by this resolution goes directly to these points, and if in my statement I was inaccurate the report of the Secretary of the Treasury will be conclusive upon the question.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me, the gentleman alleged that the $30,000,000 which he estimated to have been unexpended of the appropriations of 1891 came over to be expended in the first half of the present fiscal year, 1892——

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not catch what the gentleman from Maine has just said.

Mr. DINGLEY. I said that the gentleman from Missouri, in the remarks which were made the other day, and which were not heard at the time either by myself or by gentlemen sitting around me, but which have since been printed in the RECORD as revised, alleged, first, that $30,000,000 of unexpended appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, had come over into the present fiscal year, and were to be added to $35,000,000 which (as he gave the impression) remained of one-half of the appropriations to be expended in the fiscal year 1892, making an unpaid liability of $65,000,000 January 1, 1892, instead——

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will allow me, with all due respect, I will say that I made no remarks which either in express or implied terms declared an actual Treasury deficiency of $65,000,000, but only an outstanding liability on account of unpaid appropriations of that amount.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that as long as there is some question whether the resolution covers exactly the point at issue or not, that he permit it to go to the Committee on Appropriations, so that the committee may enlarge, if necessary, the scope of the inquiry, in order to bring out the facts.

Mr. DOCKERY. I stated, if the gentleman will permit me, that which I reiterate now, upon information obtained from the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations, that thirty millions of appropriation for 1891 were still unexpended. I further asserted that thirty-five millions fairly chargeable against the first half of the present fiscal year were unexpended, making a total of outstanding liabilities on account of unpaid appropriations for the first half of the present year and the fiscal year 1891, in round numbers, of sixty-five millions.

Mr. DINGLEY. At the end of the first six months.

Mr. DOCKERY. For the fiscal year 1891 and the first half of 1892, sixty-five millions of appropriations were unexpended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my resolution of inquiry goes directly to the facts at issue, and if the statement is inaccurate I desire the Secretary of the Treasury to so inform the House.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What is the issue now before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been reported. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], reserving the right to object, made certain inquiries of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], which inquiries are now being answered.

Mr. DOCKERY. The object of the inquiry proposed by the resolution is to show to the House and to the country whether the fiscal exhibit I submitted is correct. If the gentleman objects, that, of course, sends the resolution to the committee, as under the rule it is not now in order for consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. My suggestion was simply this, that the resolution of inquiry go to the Committee on Appropriations in order that it may be made broad enough to cover the points that are at issue. It is not broad enough as stated, but simply covers a few technical points.

Mr. DOCKERY. It covers every issue I raised against the Administration relating to unexpended appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman's remarks, which were not heard by myself or by several other gentlemen, and which have gone abroad to the country, seem to have given the impression that for the first six months there was a deficiency of $65,000,000, instead of the revenue substantially equalling the expenditures, as I understand to be the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will state to the gentleman that I made no such remarks, and the record will verify this statement.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. You made it $140,000,000 on the 1st of January. This is made simply to strengthen a bad case, and I want it to go to the Committee on Appropriations and be made broad enough to cover the inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I do object, and make no bones about it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let it go to the Committee on Appropriations, then. If the gentleman does not want the inquiry made, of course he can delay it in this way.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We want it, and we want it broad enough to cover your case. Most emphatically let it go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman objects, of course under the rule it goes to the committee. We desired to get reliable information.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We can not get reliable information from that source [pointing to Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. What, not from the Secretary of the Treasury? [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I was about to say that I would agree with the gentleman upon that point, but I will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Objection is made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STENOGRAPHERS TO MEMBERS.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I offer the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts are hereby authorized to employ stenographers, who shall be placed under the control of said committee. The duty of said stenographers shall be to aid the members of the House in their work, and shall be paid out of the contingent fund, such compensation per folio for the actual amount of work done as is customary. The number of stenographers to be determined by the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SIMPSON. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. I ask that it be read, and ask also for immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report. After it is read the Chair will ask if there be objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Department of Agriculture has come to that degree of national importance that its head official has reached the dignified position of a cabinet officer, and hence a constitutional adviser of the President; and

Whereas President Harrison, in his late message to Congress, in referring to this branch of the public service, said, "If the establishment of the Department of Agriculture was regarded by any one as a mere concession to the unenlightened demands of a worthy class of people, that impression has been most effectually removed by the great results already attained;" and

Whereas there may have arisen in the minds of several of that "worthy class of people" known as tillers of the soil, grave doubts concerning "the great results already attained," in the interest of American agriculture, by this Department, by reason of a belief, more or less prevalent, that presumed authoritative data concerning crops, growing or harvested, has been furnished to boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and conventional grain dealers, who may be characterized as "market wreckers" and as operators in "futures," prior to the conveyance of this knowledge to the toiling husbandman; by reason, also, of a quite considerable impression that obtains, that garden seeds are purchased for the purpose of distribution among the farmers of the land that were grown so long ago that they are destitute of proper germinating qualities; and further, by reason of an extensive feeling in the mind of the general public that is practically interested in agricultural pursuits that the Department is made a harbor for a large number of employés because of political considerations and influences inimical to the public weal: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a committee of five members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Department and of all matters relating to it that have a bearing upon the things above referred to and stand connected with a clean, economical, honest, and just administration of its affairs. Said committee shall be granted power and authority to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and when their investigations are ended they shall report their conclusions to this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I object, and move its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am moving to have it sent to your committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the proper committee for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] objects, and under the rules for the introduction of bills under which we are acting this would go to the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] moves its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope it will go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the resolution will go to the Committee on Rules.

AGREEMENTS WITH INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following messages from the President of the United States; which were severally read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication of the 4th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreement entered into between the Indians of the Pyramid Lake Reservation and the commission appointed under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1891, for the cession and relinquishment of the southern portion of their reservation in the State of Nevada.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication of the 4th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreement entered into between the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and the commission appointed under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1891, for the cession and relinquishment of a portion of their reservation.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication of the 8th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreement concluded by and between the Cherokee Commission and the Kickapoo tribe of Indians, in the Territory of Oklahoma, for the cession of certain lands, and for other purposes.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

BUREAU OF CORRESPONDENCE.

By Mr. CAMINETTI: A resolution instructing the Committee on Accounts to report a bill for the establishment of a bureau of correspondence for the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Rules.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC PARKS AND RESERVATIONS.

By Mr. CAMINETTI: A resolution to provide for the appointment of a select committee on public parks and reservations—to the Committee on Rules.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be authorized to have printed and bound such papers and documents for the use of the said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered by the committee during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was put, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McKINNEY. Before that motion is put, I would like to ask for leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. DANIELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. DANIELL.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the vote, the Chair will submit the following personal requests:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HERBERT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of John Halloran, without leaving copies, the claimant Halloran leaving his receipt for the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BRANCH, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

The result of the vote on Mr. CATCHING'S motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to legalizing the records of the Indian Office and authorizing the use of a seal, together with the draft of a bill for that purpose; also a communication from the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department recommending the adoption of the measure suggested; which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGREEMENT WITH SHOSHONE AND ARAPAHO INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication of the 4th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreement entered into between the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians of the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and the commission appointed under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1891, for the cession and relinquishment of a portion of their said reservation.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

PYRAMID LAKE RESERVATION LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication of the 4th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreement entered into between the Indians of the Pyramid Lake Reservation and the commission appointed under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1891, for the cession and relinquishment of the southern portion of their reservation in the State of Nevada.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

AGREEMENTS WITH KICKAPOO INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a communication of the 8th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the agreements concluded by and between the Cherokee Commission and the Kickapoo tribe of Indians in the Territory of Oklahoma for the cession of certain lands, and for other purposes.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 11, 1892.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of Rev. W. H. White and 9 other citizens of Stillwater, Minn., and the petition of J. M. Johnson and 12 other citizens of the United States, representing the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stillwater, Minn., praying for the passage of a bill loaning $5,000,000 to the directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, provided that the enactment granting such loan shall contain a guaranty that the Exposition will be closed to visitors on the Lord's day; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Vessel Owners' and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of a bill to transfer the Revenue Marine Service from the Treasury to the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SQUIRE. I present several petitions from the State of Washington representing that the settlers on the public lands within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's grant are denied the benefit of the forfeiture act of September 29, 1890. The petitioners allege that this is done by a construction which, in effect, says the act does not forfeit all the lands opposite to and coterminous with the portion of such road not now constructed, although it says so in these exact terms. Wherefore the petitioners respectfully petition Congress to pass an act construing the forfeiture act according to its original and true intent to forfeit all the lands within the 40-mile boundary, and between the terminal limits drawn at right-angles with the general course of the unconstructed road for 25 miles next to such terminals. And for the benefit of these and other settlers under like hardship they also petition that an act be passed resuming and restoring to the public domain all lands opposite to and coterminous with those portions of any railroad line not constructed within the time or according to the terms of the law under which they are claimed.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of Post 100, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, and the petition of William P. Morrison, of Newcastle, Pa., praying that William P. Morrison be granted a pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of citizens of Jefferson County, Ind., praying that the World's Columbian Fair be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PEFFER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Johnson County, Kans., praying for the passage of what is known as "the option bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of J. Altman, of Portland, Oregon, praying to be reimbursed for property taken by the United States during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON. On behalf of the special committee of both Houses, appointed under a concurrent resolution passed in the Fifty-first Congress, and for the Committee on Printing of the Senate, I report a bill providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

This bill is the result of a very great deal of investigation and labor by the special committee, and I ask that it be twice read by title and placed upon the Calendar, and I shall ask the Senate to take a very early day for the consideration of the bill. The report is not quite ready for publication, but I shall probably present it to-morrow.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that in the report will be found very abundant and urgent reasons for the passage of the bill. The committee, in the performance of its duty, took a great deal of testimony, some three hundred printed pages; it called before it experts, officers of the Government having detailed knowledge of this matter, and explored the Departments as to their printing. I shall ask the consent of the Senate to present the report to-morrow or the next day. In the mean time I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar after a second reading.

The bill (S. 1549) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Coast Defenses, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1247) to make an appropriation for the purchase of sites for fortifications, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of a majority of the Committee on Coast Defenses I am directed to report favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 871) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Coast Defenses, that I did not agree with the report which has been made in favor of the bill just reported by the Senator from Oregon. The bill carries with it an appropriation of $123,000,000, that appropriation extending over a period of eleven years. In view of the fact that the revenues of the Government to-day are hardly sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditures, and in view of the further fact that there is almost a universal demand for relief from the excessive taxation that is now being levied, I, as one member of that committee, was not willing at this time to report in favor of a bill carrying such a large appropriation of money for coast defenses.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to the bill reported. The bill was amended in the committee so that, as reported, it provides for an appropriation of only $100,000,000, $10,000,000 of the amount to be available the first year, and $9,000,000 a year for ten years, making the total amount.

The bill adopts the plan reported by the Board on Fortifications and Other Defenses, for the fortification of twenty-seven of our principal seaports, where fortifications are most urgently needed. It adopts the plan in regard to coast defenses which has been adopted so successfully in reference to a few river and harbor improvements by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and by Congress, of making a lump appropriation for a great public work.

The bill has received the approval of two successive Secretaries of War, of the Chief of Ordnance under two Administrations, of the Board of Engineers in the city of New York. It is the most economical proposition in regard to coast defenses that was ever put before Congress.

I undertake to say that, if we may judge by the reduction in the prices of work which has obtained in contracts made for certain river and harbor improvements under similar provisions in the last river and harbor act, the $100,000,000 provided in this bill will go as far as $150,000,000 appropriated in the ordinary manner. And I wish to say that the way Congress proceeds in providing for great public works, making an appropriation one year and failing to appropriate another, making inadequate appropriations, is wasteful and almost criminal on the part of those who have the disbursement of the people's money.

I now venture the prediction that if this bill does not pass—and I hardly hope it will; the committee reported it more with a view of bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate and of the country, and agitating the question of coast defenses and directing public attention to it than with the hope that it would pass as an independent measure—in twenty years Congress will appropriate $100,000,000 for coast defenses in an irregular and inadequate manner, which will be expended, and then $50,000,000 more will be required to do the work which would be done by this appropriation if made now to be available for eleven years.

I wish to say also that if any voter in the United States can not distinguish between a proposition to appropriate $100,000,000 in one year to be expended in a year, and a proposition to appropriate $100,000,000 to run through eleven years and to be distributed according to the necessities of the public work during that time, I care but very little about his opinion in regard to a public measure.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I was unable to be present at the meeting of the Coast Defense Committee at which this report was ordered, but I wish to say, without particularizing my objections at this time, that I concur with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] in his opposition to the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 79) for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STANFORD. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report favorably and without amendment the following bills, which were passed upon by the committee and by the Senate at the last Congress:

A bill (S. 687) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.;

A bill (S. 1214) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a public building at Oakland, in the State of California (with a written report);

A bill (S. 534) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oregon;

A bill (S. 1215) for an extension of appropriation for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal. (with a written report);

A bill (S. 601) for the erection of a public building for a post-office and United States land office at the city of The Dalles, Oregon; and

A bill (S. 580) to provide a suitable site for a post-office in the city of Providence, R. I.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar and the reports printed.

Mr. STANFORD also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment:

A bill (S. 55) for the erection of a public building at Virginia City, State of Nevada;

A bill (S. 56) for the erection of a public building at Reno, State of Nevada; and

A bill (S. 591) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (S. 1270) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Kansas City, in the State of Kansas;

A bill (S. 1045) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Leadville, in the State of Colorado; and

A bill (S. 592) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Bismarck, N. Dak.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 27) providing that the statute of limitations shall not be interposed as a defense by the United States in the Court of Claims in suits wherein laborers, workmen, and mechanics are seeking to recover for wages due; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PERKINS. I am not certain whether the joint resolution should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in the absence of objection.

Mr. STEWART introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 28) providing for the preparation, printing, and distribution of a law subject catalogue of the books in the United States Supreme Court law library; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

SUPPRESSION OF AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for distribution by the Senate 5,000 copies of "A general act, signed at Brussels July 2, 1890, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and other powers for the suppression of the African slave trade," and of "A convention of commerce and navigation between the United States and the independent State of Congo, signed at Brussels, January 24, 1891," as amended, with the proceedings of the Senate thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, it was Ordered, That certain memorials and resolutions of commercial, industrial, and professional bodies presented March 3, 1891, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Peter Grant Stewart, of Oregon, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING OF BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed in document form for use of the Senate 500 additional copies of Senate bill No. 1127, entitled "A bill to enlarge the shiproom and increase the comfort of immigrants."

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate the proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels at its sessions extending from September 28 to October 10, 1891, in regard to the matter of life-saving appliances on steamers, including all communications made to said board on the subject, whether in support of or adverse to the repeal of the present law, and all other documents and evidence relating to the use of projectiles and other life-saving appliances, which were before said board.

SANITARY CONDITION OF BASEMENT OF CAPITOL.

Mr. HALE. I offer an order, and ask for its immediate passage.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, directed to report forthwith to the Senate the condition of the Senate end of the Capitol in respect to its ventilation, drainage, and plumbing, and to state fully whether any defects exist which unfavorably affect the sanitary condition of the building.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not offer this order with a view of casting any censure or reproach upon the Architect of the Capitol, whom I believe to be a faithful and competent officer; but I have been informed that there is a condition of affairs in the basement or sub-basement of this end of the Capitol that is dangerous to every employé and to members of this body. Whether it be true I do not know, but I am informed that the board of health of this District has been invoked and has visited this end of the Capitol in the lower stories, and has found there a condition of things which may well be alarming to every one.

If that is the case, and if extensive changes are needed and new plumbing and new drainage required, the hands of the Architect ought to be upheld and strengthened; and if larger appropriations than are now available at his control are needed this is a subject of importance to everybody and ought to be acted upon at once; and I have made the order in its language require an immediate report. I hope that nobody will object to its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Is it a resolution? If it is a proposition for action I should like to know what it is. I did not hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the order submitted by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read again for the information of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the proposed order.

Mr. HARRIS. The order ought to be adopted at once.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution calling for information; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to send to the Senate a statement of the amount of money paid, and the date of each payment, by Mexico in compliance with the awards of the commissioners, or the umpire, made under the convention concluded between Mexico and the United States of America, concluded July 4, 1868; and, also, a statement of the amount paid out of said fund to each claimant thereof; to whom paid, and the date of payment. And the amount of any award made under said convention that has been refused payment by the State Department, and what person or persons are now the claimants of interests in said awards, the payment of which has been so refused.

The Secretary of State will also inform the Senate whether any of said fund, remaining in the Department of State, is invested, and, if so, in what securities the same is invested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to object, but I did not catch the statement as to what the resolution does.

Mr. MORGAN. The resolution calls for a report from the Department of State as to the condition and state of the fund under the convention with Mexico of July 4, 1868. It is the Weil and La Abra matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I make no objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BUSINESS BEFORE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a resolution on the table that I introduced yesterday relating to the business before the Court of Claims. I ask that it may lie over until to-morrow. It is not necessary to read it. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

ESTATE OF JAMES C. BOOTH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed and the Calendar is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1122) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia, was announced as the first bill on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It provides for paying to the heirs at law and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,841.87, in full for the cost value of 1,980.12 ounces of silver bullion, of standard fineness, deposited by him with the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia to make good a deficiency of that amount of bullion in the accounts of the mint for the fiscal year 1885, the same being the number of ounces of standard silver bullion contained in three bars missing from the mint, supposed to have been stolen while in charge of the melter and refiner, but for which safe storage could not be provided for want of vault capacity in the mint.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, January 6, 1892:

The facts connected with this bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, are fully set forth in the following letter of the Director of the Mint:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
"Washington, D. C., March 15, 1890.

"SIR: Referring to your letter of the 11th instant, inclosing Senate bill No. 1367, for the relief of the heirs of James C. Booth, late melter and refiner of the mint at Philadelphia, and asking a report on the advisability of allowing the claim, I respectfully submit the following statement:

"Prof. James C. Booth was appointed melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia in 1849, and continued to serve in that capacity until the date of his death, March 23, 1888. During this time Mr. Booth handled large amounts of both gold and silver bullion. During the fiscal year 1885, as melter and refiner of the mint, Mr. Booth received 646,626,931 standard ounces of gold bullion, with a wastage of only 7.885 ounces, and 28,936,069.91 standard ounces of silver bullion, with an apparent wastage of 3,541.93 ounces.

"It appears that on the 3d of January, 1885, the melter and refiner missed three silver bars which had been delivered to him during the year, numbered 7087, 7093, and 7113, which contained 1,980.12 ounces of silver. As his books showed no record of these bars having been melted, he immediately communicated the information of the loss by letter to the superintendent, so that on the settlement of his accounts for the fiscal year the wastage actually allowed him was 1,561.81 ounces. No trace of these bars has ever been found.

"Owing to the lack of vault room at the mint at Philadelphia the silver in bars, and for which the melter and refiner was obliged to receipt, was stored in the courtyard without any protection whatever from theft except that afforded by the watchman, and as the melter and refiner had no power to provide extra means for the safety of the bullion, it would appear that he was only technically responsible for it. As credit could not be allowed the melter and refiner for the stolen bars as wastage he was required to deposit with the superintendent an equal amount of silver bullion, which he did promptly when called upon to do so by purchasing the bullion in the open market.

"Inasmuch as proper storage facilities were not afforded the melter and refiner by the Government in which to store the bullion in his custody, I am clearly of the opinion that relief should be granted in this case to the heirs of the late melter and refiner for the loss of this bullion.

"From July 1, 1874, to March 23, 1888, Prof. Booth, as melter and refiner of the mint, handled 31,255,534.264 ounces of gold bullion of the value of $581,498,309, on which the legal allowance for wastage under section 3542 of the Revised Statutes would be $581,496.31, while the actual wastage was only $58,137. He handled of silver bullion during this time 341,940,331 ounces, of which the coining value in silver dollars was $397,894,401. The legal allowance for wastage on this under section 3542 of the Revised Statutes would be $596,841, while the amount actually wasted was only $14,565.

"E. O. LEECH.
"Director of the Mint.

"Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
"Chairman of the Committee on Finance."

The committee are therefore of the opinion that the relief asked for should be granted by the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETTS, NICHOLS & CO.

The bill (S. 69) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the holder draft No. 5453, on Treasury-Interior warrant No. 4801, dated March 1, 1860, payable to and indorsed by Sampson & Hendricks, of Austin, Tex., on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, for $250.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS January 6, 1892:

The Committee on Finance, to which was referred bill (S. 69) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co., has considered the same, and report:

There was a favorable report upon this claim made by the chairman of this committee in 1884, and the same report was adopted by the committee in the Fifty-first Congress, and the bill passed the Senate, but failed of consideration in the House. The committee adopts the former report, as follows:

"This is a claim for the payment of draft No. 5453, issued by the assistant treasurer at New Orleans on Interior Department warrant No. 4801, to Sampson & Hendricks, March 1, 1860, for $250, originating out of mercantile transactions prior to the recent war, which draft remains unpaid in consequence of the inability of the payees to prove the loyalty of the drawer, according to the joint resolution of March 2, 1867 (section 3480, Revised Statutes).

"The draft was indorsed in blank, and is now held by F. B. Betts, the surviving partner of Betts, Nichols & Co.; and although it appears that great remissness occurred on the part of Betts, Nichols & Co. in the presentation of the claim, it having been first presented in June, 1870, again in March, 1874, and lastly in January, 1884, yet as there does not appear to be any doubt in relation to the loyalty of the payees, the parties really in interest, it is difficult to see why the claim should be refused.

"As these facts appear from the subjoined letter from the Treasury Department, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report, the committee recommend that the bill pass as amended.

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE FIRST AUDITOR,
"Washington, D. C., January 18, 1884.

"SIR: Referring to the letter of Senator MCPHERSON, of January 16 instant, addressed to you and by you sent to this office, in which he asks to be advised of the reasons why the claim of Betts, Nichols & Co., for the payment of a certain draft, can not be allowed, I have the honor to report as follows:

"Under date of March 1, 1861, draft No. 5453, on Treasury-Interior warrant No. 4801, for $250, was issued in favor of Sampson & Hendricks upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans.

"The draft is indorsed in blank by the payees.

"In June, 1870, the draft was sent to this office and claim made for payment by Betts, Nichols & Co.

"June 29, 1870, the claimants were informed by the First Auditor that it would be necessary, before payment could be made, to prove the loyalty of the payees and of the present holders of the draft, under the joint resolution of March 2, 1867 (now section 3480, Revised Statutes).

"June 21 the claimants reply, stating that they can not prove the loyalty of Sampson & Hendricks, but presume it will be sufficient to prove their own loyalty.

"June 22 the Auditor again writes that the requirements of his letter of the 20th must be complied with before the draft can be paid.

"This office is not aware of any similar cases that have been favorably acted upon by Congress.

"I return herewith the letter of Senator MCPHERSON with the inclosures (4).

"Very respectfully,

"R. M. REYNOLDS,
"First Auditor.

"Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

The committee recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if there is any evidence that the draft was assigned to these parties prior to the passage of the joint resolution of March 2, 1867, which I believe was the date requiring proof of loyalty in all such cases. It strikes me that this matter ought properly to have been before the Committee on Claims. I remember that in the Forty-fourth Congress there was a bill pending before that committee in regard to a draft, I think for $200, I am not sure as to the amount, but I scarcely think it was this particular draft. However, there was a bill pending for the payment of a draft drawn in 1860, and that committee reported adversely on the ground that the owner could not prove loyalty. This report says that "there does not appear to be any doubt as to the loyalty of the payee." Now, the question is when his right accrued. If a mere assignment to a loyal person by a disloyal claimant after the law has taken effect and has barred the right of that person revives the right and enables the payee to come in, then all those drafts that were drawn in 1860 ought to be paid, because they can all be assigned now at any moment to some loyal man.

Mr. HARRIS. The fact is, that in this case the assignment was made in 1871. The draft was issued March 1, 1861, and very soon thereafter it was assigned to these merchants in Baltimore, the present holders, and I suppose it was pigeonholed during the war excitement and not presented until after the end of the war.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desired that information because it is not stated in the report. The report does not state the date of the assignment, and it is a very material point.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRADFORD, PA.

Mr. QUAY. Order of Business 21 on the Calendar is a bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Bradford, Pa., which was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. As that bill will probably not be reached to-day in regular order, and as I may be necessarily absent for some days hereafter, I shall be glad if the Senate will indulge me by taking it up out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DOLPH. I will not object to the Senator's request, but the Calendar is a short one, and we can certainly dispose of all the unobjected cases on it to-day.

Mr. QUAY. I renew the request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 902) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bradford, Pa.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read on that bill, as it is a short one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr.

DARLINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, May 7, 1890:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7986) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bradford, Pa., report as follows:

Bradford is situated in McKean County, is the center of the northern Pennsylvania oil regions; has a population of 15,000 and 5,000 suburban population.

The city was incorporated in 1878, and presents remarkable growth and thrift, over five hundred buildings having been erected during the past year. The manufacturing industries are represented by lumber, planing mills, chairs, oil refineries, tanneries, tannin-extract works, wood-alcohol works, boilers, engines, brass, glass, tools, wagons, carriages, paint, hubs, toothpicks, etc. The amount paid for labor in the city aggregates more than $200,000 per month.

Nine railroads connect the city with other commercial centers. There are ten churches, two daily and four weekly newspapers, forty-two beneficiary orders represented, three express companies, public schools with 2,000 scholars, besides one business college and three private schools; three national banks, with an aggregate capital of $450,000; driving park and fair grounds; two petroleum exchanges. The receipts of the United States post-office aggregate over $20,000 per annum, besides the collections of internal revenue.

In view of the foregoing facts we recommend the passage of said bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LA ABRA SILVER MINING COMPANY.

The bill (S. 606) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. That bill is to be taken up on Monday next.

Mr. DOLPH. That bill was made a special order for Monday next, and of course it will go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, and also the bill next in order, being Senate bill 539, on the same subject.

RED RIVER BRIDGE AT DRAYTON, N. DAK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 593) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Drayton, N. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF SANDUSKY, OHIO.

The bill (S. 1183) to extend the privileges of the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to the port of Sandusky, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LICENSING AND REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 747) to repeal section 4145 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and to amend section 4146, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. This act shall not invalidate the bonds heretofore given under the provisions of said section 4145.

And insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. That section 4320, Revised Statutes, is hereby amended so as to read:

"SEC. 4320. No licensed vessel shall be employed in any trade whereby the revenue laws of the United States shall be defrauded. The master of every such vessel shall swear that he is a citizen of the United States, and that such license shall not be used for any other vessel or any other employment than that for which it was specially granted, or in any trade or business whereby the revenue of the United States may be defrauded; and if such vessel be less than 20 tons burden, the husband or managing owner shall swear that she is wholly the property of citizens of the United States; whereupon it shall be the duty of the collector of the district comprehending the port whereto such vessel may belong to grant a license."

SEC. 4. That no bond shall be required on the licensing of yachts; no licensed yacht shall engage in any trade, nor in any way violate the revenue laws of the United States; and every such yacht shall comply with the laws in all respects. Section 1 of the act approved March 3, 1883, amending section 4214, Revised Statutes, etc., is amended accordingly.

SEC. 5. Any master or owner violating the provisions of this or the preceding section shall be liable to the penalty of $200, in addition to any other penalty imposed by law. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to remit or mitigate any such penalty if in his opinion it was incurred without negligence or intention of fraud.

SEC. 6. This act shall not invalidate the bonds heretofore given under the requirements of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have sent for the Senator in charge of the bill. As the bill seems to be a very important one, I should like to have some explanation of it and of the changes it makes in the existing law.

Mr. FRYE. The existing laws require a bond, first, for every registered vessel, that is, a vessel engaging in foreign trade; second, for every coastwise and lake vessel, a separate statute; third, for every yacht. These bonds were provided for very early in the history of legislation in the United States. They have fallen into utter uselessness. They are still required by the statute. It occasions, of course, considerable trouble to give them. Sureties are required, and, depending upon the size of the vessel, there is a bond running from $400 up to $2,500. For the last thirty or forty years no one has ever been put in suit, and the reason is that other statutes have provided penalties for the violations which these bonds guard against. For instance, a captain gives a bond that his vessel shall not engage in any smuggling operation, but there is a statute passed since which punishes for smuggling, and if there is any violation of existing law the Government pursues the penalty instead of the bond.

The custom-house officers all over the country are exceedingly desirous that these bonds shall be surrendered, and the Secretary of the Treasury reported in favor of it four years ago, three years ago, and two years ago, and the Commissioner of Navigation also reported in favor of it. This bill has passed the Senate twice, and there is no possible objection to it.

The bill also provides, at the end of it, a penalty, and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to mitigate the penalty if he finds there has been no intentional violation of the law, but a mere technical violation of it. I know of no objection on the part of anyone to the provisions of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to repeal section 4145 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to amend sections 4146, 4320, also section 1 of the act amending section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, approved March 3, 1883, and for other purposes."

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT ROGUE RIVER, OREGON.

The bill (S. 1074) to establish additional life-saving stations was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 4, after the word "establish," to strike out "additional" and insert "a;" in the same line, after the word "life-saving," to strike out "stations on the coast of Oregon as follows: One" and insert "station;" and in line 6, after the words "Rogue River," to strike out "and one at or near Port Orford" and insert "on the coast of Oregon;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near the mouth of Rogue River, on the coast of Oregon.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Oregon."

REVENUE CUTTERS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

The bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 3, to fill the blank before the word "dollars" with the words "two hundred and twenty-five thousand;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing two first-class revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, one of which shall have at least 450 tons displacement and the other not less than 600 tons displacement, and each of which shall be so constructed and equipped as to secure a speed of 15 knots per hour.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish, in the first place, to say that I was authorized to report the bill in accordance with the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and they had inserted in figures the amount to be appropriated for the vessels, but by some oversight I read it "$225,000" instead of "$325,000." I send up a letter, since received, which asks that "$325,000" be inserted instead of "$225,000." The report may be read after the bill is perfected. I ask that the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1892.

SIR: Referring to the letter of the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, dated the 23d ultimo, calling upon this Department for its views regarding Senate bill 1104, providing for the construction of two revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, and to Department letter dated December 30, setting forth the necessity for the two vessels mentioned, and recommending the passage of the bill; also estimating the cost of the two vessels at $325,000, I have the honor to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the bill as reported provides for but $225,000 for these vessels, which amount, in the opinion of the Department, is inadequate to construct two steamers of the sizes and requirements specified in said bill.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, U. S. S.,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, as I believe there is no written report with the bill, I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. MITCHELL. There is a written report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have it read.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is report No. 5.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH January 7, 1891:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast, having considered the same, respectfully report:

The urgent necessity for the construction of two revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast is shown by a letter from Acting Secretary of the Treasury Spaulding to the chairman of the committee, which is hereto appended.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by inserting in the blank the following words. "Two hundred and twenty-five thousand," and that when so amended the bill do pass.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 30, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to respectfully acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 23d instant, inclosing Senate bill 1104, "making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast," and requesting this Department to furnish your committee with such suggestions as it may deem proper touching upon the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply thereto I would say that the Department has considered the necessity for two new cutters on the Pacific coast so urgent that it has included in the regular estimates the sums of $175,000 and $150,000 for the construction of two vessels, the former sum for a vessel for service at San Francisco and, during the summer months, in Bering Sea, for the protection of the seal islands and the Government interests in Alaska, and the latter for a vessel for service in Puget Sound and the waters adjacent to the State of Washington.

The revenue cutters now on the Pacific coast were built many years ago, and have been kept steadily at work in the performance of the multifarious duties required of them. They are of the age when vessels require frequent repairs, and they should gradually be replaced by new vessels of more modern type of hull and machinery which will give greater power and speed.

The difference between the laws of this country and those of the Dominion of Canada regulating the importation of Chinese and opium offers special inducements to smugglers to make the Canadian ports on Puget Sound the base of their operations, and the many hundreds of miles of shore line contiguous to this foreign territory requires the constant patrol and watching by a revenue cutter to prevent, as far as possible, the illegal landing of these people and their goods.

During the season just past all of the cutters available were withdrawn temporarily from their stations on the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington, and sent to Bering Sea for patrol duty around the seal islands and the protection of the Government interests in those waters, and as similar demands will probably be made for cutters in those waters for years to come the number of revenue vessels on the Pacific coast should be increased by two or three so soon as they can be constructed.

I earnestly recommend to your committee the passage of Senate bill 1104, and name the amounts mentioned herein respectively as necessary to properly build and equip the new vessels.

The bill (S. 1104) is herewith returned.

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, U. S. Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if there are not already some vessels employed in that business on the Pacific coast?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, there is a small vessel that was constructed many years ago, but which is badly out of repair, is not sufficient for the service, and which, part of the time, is stationed on Puget Sound. I think it is stated in the letter which has been read, but, if not, such is the case, that at one time last summer all the vessels on the coast had to be sent off to the north to look after matters there. There could not be a stronger statement of the necessity for these vessels than is contained in the report as made by the board.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me to interrupt him a moment, I will say, in regard to the vessel of which he is speaking, if it be the one in charge of the collector, that it was merely a rejected vessel that had become useless and was filled with water. It was improvised by the customs officers by permission of the Department having the matter in charge, and has been used as best it could; it was really a makeshift, a rejected craft, and only used because the collector had nothing else to use.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have they no other vessel in the Revenue Marine Service over there?

Mr. DOLPH. I think there are two on the coast. I think there is one in California, and the condition of that is not much better than the one on the Sound.

Mr. ALLEN. The trouble with the old revenue cutter on the Sound, also, is that it is so slow; it is ineffectual for the services required to be rendered. Smugglers come in, and if they get a few minutes start of the revenue cutter, they land, are gone—and there is no means whatever of arresting them.

The necessity for the cruisers the Senator has spoken of has been the crying need of those waters for several years past. Any one who is there to witness the attempt at the enforcement of the revenue laws or the Chinese exclusion act, feels how imperatively these cruisers are required, and recognizes there is no way of enforcing the law except by swift cruisers, such as are provided for in this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to say a word. I introduced this bill in pursuance of a very earnest recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report. The report submitted by the committee states the facts fully and shows the necessity for this legislation. I hope, if there is no objection to it, the bill will be allowed to pass promptly.

Mr. COCKRELL. This involves a side issue. The Revenue Marine Service has been drumming all the possible influence that it could to get boards of exchange and other bodies to pass resolutions for the transfer of that service to the Navy Department. A bill has been introduced, and was pressed during the last Congress with a great deal of force, for the transfer of the Revenue Marine to the Navy. That bill is before Congress now, and every morning or two we have the lobbyist influence bringing in resolutions from boards of trade and other bodies favoring the passage of that bill.

If the Revenue Marine is to be transferred to the Navy there is no necessity for any vessels being built for it. That service will go into and become part of the Navy and will have the use of naval vessels. The Revenue Marine Service seems to be playing hot and cold with its own existence, trying to wipe out its existence and have itself transferred to the Navy.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what the proposition to transfer this service from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department has to do with this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Revenue Marine Service is transferred to the Navy the officers of that service will be placed in charge of naval vessels, and there will be no need of constructing simply revenue vessels. They will then go out of the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. Let us get a report from the Secretary of the Navy as to whether any additional vessels are needed or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the Senator certain that we have any surplus vessels in the Navy now?

Mr. COCKRELL. There would be plenty of vessels for that service.

Mr. MITCHELL. As a matter of fact the Revenue Marine Service has not been transferred to the Navy Department and is still under the control of the Treasury Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. With the influences which have been brought to bear, I think it probable that they will be able to have a bill passed through this body for the transfer of that service; I think it likely that such a bill will be passed at the instance of these men to wipe out their own existence and to destroy their identity as a body and merge them into another body, so that they may get increased pay and be placed upon the pension and the retired lists.

Mr. MITCHELL. Judging from the very able and very lengthy speech of the Senator from Missouri in opposition to the proposed transfer at the last session, it seems to me the influence is all the other way, and the transfer is not likely to be made if the Senator from Missouri can prevent it.

Mr. COCKRELL. You are right there. It will not be transferred if I can prevent it. I will continue that fight a little while longer if I can. I do not want them to commit suicide.

Mr. DOLPH. I am glad to believe that the Senator from Missouri is making no particular opposition to this bill; that he merely wishes at this time to call attention to the proposition to transfer the Revenue Marine to the Navy; but we have already heard from the Senator elaborately on that point.

The Senator should remember and the Senate should remember that there are upon the Pacific coast over 1,600 miles of coast from the southern line of California to Puget Sound; that there are then along the navigable indentations of Puget Sound over 1,900 miles of shore line on the American side; that there is a purely imaginary line drawn between British Columbia and the State of Washington, and that the facilities for smuggling are very great anywhere along the line that marks the boundary between the two countries. Running through the Sound there are scattered all along the line islands. The distance from the islands to the main shore is not great, and there is a great deal of smuggling of opium, of Chinese, and of merchandise into this country. It would require more than one vessel and a much larger force of customs officers than we now have upon the Sound to prevent smuggling entirely. Of course the faster and better the vessels and the more of them the better it can be prevented.

Then there are our Alaskan possessions, which are said to contain, following the indentations, 25,000 miles of shore or coast; there is the Bering Sea question and the necessity of patrolling those seas and preventing the unlawful taking of seals, which is required of vessels in the marine and naval service.

All these things are matters requiring attention and demanding a better class of vessels than we have on the coast. I think it would be a matter of economy to make the necessary appropriation and have these new vessels constructed.

I shall say no more unless there is further opposition to the measure, because I can not believe that any one can seriously object to the construction of these vessels. Let us have one thing at a time, and let us get the necessary vessels to enable the customs officers to enforce the laws, and then, when we come to the other question in which the Senator from Missouri is interested, we shall listen to him discuss that, and then we shall determine it according to its merits.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is putting the cart before the horse. If the Revenue Marine Service is to continue as it is now organized, under the Secretary of the Treasury, and as it has been from the foundation of the service, then I admit that there are very reasonable and just grounds for asking for these additional vessels; but if the Revenue Marine Service is to be transferred bodily to the Navy and absorbed in the Navy and become a part of the Navy, then this is wasteful, extravagant, and unnecessary. That is the position I take. If the Senate wants to make this appropriation with the expectation of the Revenue Marine Service continuing as it is, it is a just and proper appropriation. If it is made with the intention of in a very short time transferring the Revenue Marine to the Navy Department, then it is the grossest kind of extravagant and wasteful legislation.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me, sir, as though the inquiry raised by the Senator from Missouri is a very pertinent and a very proper one. No Senator can doubt, I think, from the vote taken in this body at the last session of Congress, that the Revenue Marine Service will ultimately be placed under the control of the Navy Department of the country. If the Revenue Marine should be transferred to the Navy Department they will require an entirely different character of vessels from those used at the present time in that service. The vessels created by the Navy Department to supervise the Revenue Marine will probably also be vessels for offensive and defensive warfare measurably; and as it would require an additional number of vessels of a different character, it seems to me as though an appropriation of money at the present time to build revenue cutters is an expenditure which might possibly in the future be considered entirely useless.

I am in full sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] with respect to a want of something in the shape of vessels to patrol the seas on the Pacific coast, but as I understand the situation the Revenue Marine as a department has but little to do with the protection of the seas. The business of the Revenue Marine is to protect so far as it can the collections of the revenue.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I inquire of the Senator if it is not a fact that that service requires a different class of vessels entirely from the regular naval vessels?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not necessarily. The naval vessel of to-day is a vessel of great speed. The vessel to secure the collection of the revenue and to do that thing which the Revenue Marine does to-day may also be a naval vessel measureably, a small vessel with great speed, with great power, capable of being armed and carrying a battery, while the present light, flimsy structures that we are now building for the Revenue Marine would be impossible for such an emergency or for such a purpose.

If it be the object of Congress to transfer the Revenue Marine to the Navy Department in order, as the argument has been made here, that it may relieve to a certain extent the overburdened Treasury Department of the Government, which everybody admits is overburdened and overworked to-day by reason of the multitude of things that have been thrown in upon that Department, it certainly would seem to me to be very proper to wait a few months longer, in order that there might be then an intelligent construction of vessels which would serve the purpose of the Revenue Marine, and also a purpose for naval vessels in shoal water where great speed is required and perhaps armament. Certainly one of our Revenue Marine vessels could make but little progress upon the sealing grounds in opposition to vessels that are, as I understand some of them have been, armed for the purpose of poaching upon the sealing grounds.

I believe we ought to have vessels to patrol the seas, and that the action now proposed would be premature in anticipation of what I think is sure to follow, that the Revenue Marine Service will be transferred to the Navy Department. While I am not much in sympathy with that transfer myself, yet at the same time I think we have sufficient reason for believing that it may take place. Therefore it is infinitely wiser and better for us to postpone action upon this bill until that first question is determined. Then let the Navy Department determine for itself the character of vessels it will build, both to patrol the seas and collect the revenue, as that will be a part of its responsibility, and also to so construct the vessels that they may be utilized for offensive and defensive warfare to the extent of their military ability.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is entirely mistaken. The proposition to transfer the Revenue Marine to the Navy is to transfer the vessels and the personnel. The same vessels will be required in the same service in which they are now employed. They will simply be transferred to the Navy Department. The same officers and the same crews and the same appliances will be used, and the change will be that they will be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy instead of under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The same requirements will exist for these new vessels if the Revenue Marine should be transferred to the Navy Department as if it is to remain under the Treasury Department.

It seems to me an almost extraordinary proposition. Our friends are looking ahead to what one Senator evidently hopes may take place and what another Senator contends shall not take place if he can prevent it; and they want to postpone this necessary and useful legislation (the suggestion and recommendation of which came from the Department charged with the duties which are to be performed by these vessels) until something may or may not happen in the future—until some legislation may or may not take place upon which we are divided. It seems to me a most extraordinary proposition to make in regard to a bill which has taken the usual course and come from the committee charged with its consideration, recommended by the Department as necessary in the public interest. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I only want to say a single word in answer to the Senator from Oregon. The Senator is quite right when he says that the proposed transfer involves the transfer of the personnel of the Revenue Marine and its vessels to the Navy; but let me ask the Senator from Oregon what an intelligent administration of the Navy Department would mean when all that is done? Would it mean to continue the construction of this class of vessels, or would it mean the construction of vessels of the same speed with all the requirements of a Revenue Marine vessel, and in addition the other and the better and more useful requirements of vessels capable of both offensive and defensive warfare?

Mr. DOLPH. Most assuredly the construction of this same character of vessels, which are supposed to be the vessels adapted, and best adapted, to the purpose for which they are used. If there should be an attempt to put upon one of these vessels those things which would be necessary to make it useful in the Navy and for coast defense, it would be ruined for the purpose for which the vessels are desired.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I am entirely in sympathy with the object and purpose of the bill. I am familiar with the circumstances attending the smuggling of opium and the bringing of Chinese into the United States in violation of the exclusion act. It has been a scandal on Puget Sound for many years that there has been conducted the manufacture or refinement of opium. There are many factories going there day and night, and it seems impossible to repress this smuggling unless we have some facilities connected with the revenue service to prevent the carrying on of this nefarious business. The collector of the port at Puget Sound has written me a letter recently in which he says that he finds himself utterly unable to intercept the smugglers who are bringing over opium and the Chinese. Even if he has three hours' notice, the craft they have there, the revenue cutters, can only go about seven or eight miles an hour at most; and it has been stated, although I will not vouch for its correctness, that there is a vessel there employed by smugglers which proceeds at the rate of 17 knots an hour, bringing opium and Chinese from the Island of Vancouver to the United States.

Now, in my humble judgment the rate of speed should be higher than 15 knots per hour. I think the speed of the vessels ought to be 18 knots an hour, and I feel that it is my duty to rise here and insist that there should be such an amendment proposed. While I do not expect to succeed in it against the Committee on Commerce, yet I feel that it is my duty to make the proposition myself right here and now, and I do propose to amend the bill by striking out the word "fifteen" and inserting "eighteen" before the word "knots" in the last line.

We want a vessel there that will accomplish the purpose. We are tired of the scandal which has been going on for years and years. I remember very well when I was governor of the Territory of Washington, that Capt. C. L. Hooper, of the United States Revenue Marine, addressed a letter to me which I incorporated in my report to the Secretary of the Interior calling attention to the inefficiency of the customs service at that time. Although he was doing his best to carry out the wishes of the Department, it has been a scandal to my personal knowledge for about seven or eight years. They are unable to intercept the smugglers; they are unable to intercept those who are bringing over Chinese. The Chinese are brought over and parties bringing them are paid $50 a head to land them at any point in the United States. If we mean anything by the Chinese exclusion act, if we mean anything by our duty upon opium, and by our endeavors to repress the smuggling of opium, we ought to give the Treasury Department the proper facilities to prevent the consummation of the smuggling of opium and the bringing in of Chinese.

Therefore, with great deference to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I feel it to be my duty, even if it is voted down, to move the amendment I have indicated, and I ask him to accept it in behalf of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] will not be in order until after the committee amendment and the amendment to it have been disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the Senators from New Jersey and Missouri are really serious about this matter. It does not seem to me that the Senator from Missouri, who has been in the Senate so long and is so familiar with these matters, dreams that a naval vessel will be ordered to the Revenue Service. There is not a vessel in the United States Navy that would be fit for the Revenue Service at all. These must all be light-draft vessels. They are obliged to run up rivers and around islands and over shoals, and all that sort of thing, to pursue the smugglers whose boats do not ever draw perhaps over 5 or 6 feet of water. That is their business. In the Alaskan waters I do not believe that either Senator ever heard of a naval vessel being employed in pursuing sealers. There was the Bear, and there were the revenue cutters we had over there. Our revenue cutters up to the present time do not run in those waters more than 7 or 8 miles an hour. They can not overtake a good yacht-built schooner of 100 tons—not one of them. The sealers are generally yacht-built schooners that will run from 70 tons to 100 tons. They do not draw over 6 or 7 or 8 feet of water. They are very swift. They will run, with a good wind, 10 or 12 miles an hour, and you must have vessels built on purpose to meet the requirements of that service. There is not a vessel in the United States Navy that the Secretary of the Navy would dream to-day of ordering into the service of detecting or arresting violations of the revenue laws. They are not equipped, they are not armed, they are not manned at all for that sort of service, but for a much more fleet and broader service.

These vessels would be absolutely necessary whether the service should be transferred to the Navy Department or not—just as necessary then as now. They must be built. One naval vessel alone, such as the Senator from New Jersey is taking about, for this business, would cost over $500,000. You do not need such vessels. You have them armored; you say they must be able to meet the enemy on water. For this service we do not need anything of the kind. The sealers and smugglers are not armed with any weapons that can do any special harm to an ordinary vessel, such a vessel as this bill provides for. They have a little swivel or something of that kind, a few rifles, and that is about all they have.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I will state the position that I take in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. It requires a large number of vessels to accomplish the work of the Revenue Marine, at least a large number is in use. I understand that the vessels of the Revenue Marine are nearly all of them old vessels. We have been building one, I think, every two years for the past eight or ten years. We have very few good vessels in that service. They are an old style of vessels; they are slow, most of them, and they are of but little use even for the purpose to which they are applied.

Now, if you transfer to the Navy Department the Revenue Marine the probability is, I would assume, that an intelligent administration of that office would accomplish the purpose of building vessels similar to our gunboats, of which we are constructing a certain number, of light draft, with great speed, even more speed than is provided for in this bill, for Revenue Marine purposes. Those gunboats in time of peace could certainly be posted along the shore and patrol the shore; and we always expect it to be a time of peace in this country. Therefore the vessel could serve two purposes—in an emergency it could be a vessel of war to its limited military capacity; in time of peace it would accomplish the other purpose. It has all the speed, the light draft, and could have the armament without any additional expenditures of money in manning the vessel. That was the position I took.

Mr. FRYE. I still insist, and I will not argue it, that the employment of a gunboat in the Revenue Service is an absurdity; that it never will be done; that it can not be done. It is utterly impracticable.

Now, I want to say a word in relation to the proposed amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. The bill provides for a vessel that will run 17 miles and a little over an hour. There is not a vessel on the Pacific coast to-day engaged in smuggling or engaged in bringing in Chinese that can make 15 miles an hour. I think it is perfectly safe to state that one can not be found that will make 15 miles an hour. Most of them are sail, and there is not a sailing vessel that can be relied upon to make over 10 miles an hour.

Mr. SQUIRE. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment I will state what the collector of the Puget Sound collection district personally stated to me of his own knowledge. He is an old sea captain who knows something about navigation and knows all about this business. He has been engaged in repressing the smuggling of opium, and he says that they have now to contend with a vessel which is owned, as he believes, by an officer of the British navy, though perhaps I ought not to make it public in this way, a private vessel, that does make 17 knots an hour. He has this to contend with now.

Mr. FRYE. Did he say "knots" or "miles?"

Mr. SQUIRE. I understood him to say "knots," and I believe he did say "knots."

Mr. FRYE. I should beg leave to doubt whether there is any such vessel in existence. Seventeen miles an hour for a 400 ton vessel is exceedingly swift. It must occupy a good deal of room for engines that will drive such a vessel at that speed. If you add to the number of knots that the Senator from Washington now requires, the whole bill must be changed; you must increase the cost largely. It will take quite double the coal to run 18 knots an hour that it will take to run 15 knots, and of course it will take double the number of men to handle that coal.

The Treasury Department know what is required on the Pacific coast and they have called on that coast for the swiftest vessels there are in the Revenue Marine. There are no swifter vessels than these. We talk nowadays about 15, 18, and 20 knots an hour, and we tried in our postal bill 20 knots an hour. Those vessels at 20 knots an hour are vessels that cost from a million and a half to two million dollars and take 300 tons of coal a day. The City of Paris always takes that amount on board, 300 tons a day, and it takes 175 men to handle that coal. There is no use to talk anything about that. The ratio of increase when you get the increased speed is perfectly enormous. The Treasury Department have allowed for the Pacific service the best revenue vessels that ever have been built. If the Senator insists upon his amendment and should carry it, it would defeat the bill, because the amount of the appropriation it contains would be entirely inadequate. The size of the vessel would be inadequate on account of the increased amount of machinery and the room which it occupies.

I hope that the Senate will pass the bill as the Treasury Department recommended it. They possess entire information of all the necessities of the service there, and they have been asking for this measure for the last three years.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I am well content with the bill as it has been reported, and I would very much prefer to have it as it is than to run the hazard of failing in the measure by attempting to secure something even more desirable. I think if Senators were familiar with the exact condition of things on our northwestern waters they would see not only the propriety but the imperative necessity of just such vessels as are provided for in the bill.

I wish to call their attention to the fact that from the Pacific Ocean up to Puget Sound is a distance of 85 miles. This is the common highway of the British Government as well as our own nation. The international boundary line is the thread of the Straits of Fuca, a broad roadway from 8 to 12 miles in width all the way from the ocean into Puget Sound. It is densely grown with forests much of the way along on both shores, as well as I remember.

Owing to the very high duty placed upon opium every incentive is given to smuggling it into the United States. The smallest quantity brought over becomes exceedingly remunerative to those engaged in this unlawful business. The result is that this illicit commodity is shipped in immense quantities into British Columbia to run over in our country, and a whole army of men, who are engaged in the smuggling business, resort to every method and device their ingenuity suggests to reap the advantages that come from successful smuggling. They have small steamers, very fleet, and all sorts of small sail and row boats. They not only have this great roadway of 85 miles, along which, if they make a successful run and landing, they are secure in smuggling, but they have the waters intersected with islands from Port Townsend to Bellingham Bay and Blaine. It is necessary, in order to intercept the smugglers, that there should be some fleet vessel, that in the night or in the fog can quickly overtake and capture them before they succeed in making a landing; for once on shore and in the timber and dense undergrowth they are secure.

It is necessary in order to successfully enforce the law over this greatly exposed frontier that vessels of just this character should be placed in the service, and nothing else will answer the purpose. Their presence will operate effectively as a preventive against persons attempting to violate the law. They must be of this fleetness and of light draft to enable them to get around quickly between the islands, through the narrows, in the shallows, and in those places where the smuggler goes. They must be able to pursue this class of violators wherever they appear upon the face of those waters.

Therefore, it is that the Treasury Department have recommended the construction of these vessels just as the bill has been reported to the Senate. I hope the measure will be adopted. I hope it will be adopted at once, because it is urgent.

Mr. MITCHELL. The committee reported the bill as recommended by the Department, except as to the amount. I think the recommendation of the Treasury Department is $325,000, while the report of the committee is $225,000.

Mr. FRYE. That is simply an error. The amendment the committee have agreed to modify to make the bill correspond with the figures of the Department.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought that amendment had been made. I was acquiescing in it in the amended form.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the Senate unduly in this matter, nor to delay action, but I think now is the time to state the truth plainly and pertinently on this question. I have already spoken briefly about it. I did not know the bill was to be brought up this morning, or I would have been prepared to say something more and decidedly better. But I want to say that I am familiar with this subject. I have studied it for a number of years. I have paid a great deal of attention to it. I know the facts and details about it. I have conversed with the special agent of the Treasury Department on the subject. Mr. Mulkey confirmed the statement made to me by the collector of the port, that there is a vessel which runs at the rate of 17 knots per hour plying between the shores of the island of Vancouver and the United States.

Now, it seems to me that we make a great mistake if we are going to lay out $325,000 for a suitable vessel for the customs marine there and do not aim to have one that is suitable and fully competent for the purpose intended.

With regard to the remarks of the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, as to the relative cost of such a vessel, it seems to me that $325,000, which I understand the committee have agreed to recommend in place of $225,000, as proposed in the bill, will be enough to construct a proper vessel that will have the speed of 18 knots per hour.

Mr. FRYE. The bill provides for two vessels.

Mr. DOLPH. It provides for two vessels.

Mr. SQUIRE. I had not studied the text of the bill; but will not $325,000 construct two suitable vessels? Can not they use part of this money for the purpose of speed? You do not require any armament of any importance on such a vessel as that. It is to be used for the purpose of intercepting the smugglers; it is not to be used for the ordinary purposes of a vessel of the Navy. It is to be used for the purpose of benefiting the Revenue Marine Service. We have been going on for several years——

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Washington allow me to state that these vessels are not intended for Puget Sound alone. They are intended for use along the California coast; they are intended for use on Puget Sound; they are intended for use in Alaska; they are intended for use in the Bering Sea.

Mr. SQUIRE. So I understand.

Mr. DOLPH. The necessity of preventing smuggling is probably greater in Alaska than it is on Puget Sound. On Puget Sound there is more loss to the Government, but in Alaska intoxicating liquors are constantly being smuggled into the Territory, and, on account of there being from 33,000 to 35,000 Indians there and only two or three thousand white persons and persons of mixed blood, the lives and the property of individuals are constantly jeopardized by the illicit traffic. These vessels are intended to be used on the entire Pacific coast.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I only want to emphasize one point. The revenue-marine cutters now in those waters and that have been there for the past two years are characterized by the collector of the port under whose direction they move as being absolutely worthless to-day. I have that from him in a letter received——

Mr. FRYE. There is no doubt about that at all.

Mr. SQUIRE. They are absolutely worthless, they are good for nothing. We want something that is suitable for the purpose and we want the best kind of vessels for the purpose. We do not want to come short of the very best thing. It may be that there should be more money provided than is named in the bill; but certainly I would have that money laid out for the purpose of getting speed. That is what we want. I do not feel like withdrawing my amendment, and I wish the chairman of that committee would allow it to be the recommendation of the committee. Can you not do that, sir?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir.

Mr. DOLPH. It would jeopardize the bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. Let us have the best we can get, or make an effort for it anyway.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask either the Senator who reported the bill or the chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether the Secretary of the Treasury has expressed the opinion that 15 knots speed can be obtained for these two vessels, one of them of 450 tons and the other of 600 tons? Is it conceded that even that speed can be obtained as a sustained sea speed in vessels of this size?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, that a contract can be made guaranteeing that speed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I think the Senator from the State of Washington had better withdraw his amendment, for certainly the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is correct, that if you undertake to go above that speed you can not get it in these two vessels. Speed requires displacement, and these are two very small vessels. I concede that there are small vessels to be built for $225,000, and I shall vote cheerfully for the increase which has been proposed to $325,000. But it is my judgment, from a superficial knowledge of this subject, that it will take nearly all the space there is in the 450-ton vessel and in the 600-ton vessel to get 15 knots speed. There will be very little room for coal, for stores, and for the crew, if they are built exactly as the Treasury Department proposes to build them. If you were to pass the amendment of the Senator from Washington, and order that these little boats should be carried up to an 18-knot speed, which is about 21 or 22 miles an hour, the ship would have to be built like the Cushing or Stiletto—nothing but boilers and engines—and the ships would not answer at all for the purpose for which they are designed.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. There is one point I wish to mention for the information of the Senator, and that is that there are coal mines and coaling stations all around Puget Sound. The vessels can coal there every two hours if they wish to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator from Oregon has said, if these boats were to be simply confined to Puget Sound and not to go outside, up and down the coast, where they would encounter heavy weather, and up to meet the stormy weather of the Bering Sea, then you might get into two boats of this size the boilers and engines that would give them a very high speed. But they would be nothing but boilers and engines, with a light hull around, and they could not be outside cruising cutters at all.

Mr. President, while I am up I will take occasion to say that I shall vote with pleasure for this appropriation. I think there is no place on our coast where we need more revenue-cutter vessels nor better vessels than on the very line of coast about which we are speaking. I do not think the question of the transfer of the Revenue Marine to the Navy Department arises upon this bill, for while it may be true, as the Senator from Maine says, that the ordinary naval gunboat would not be suitable for this cutter service, yet it is true that if you were to transfer the Revenue Marine Service to the Navy Department to-day, the Navy Department would require for the work which it would then do at the service of the Treasury Department precisely these two vessels which you undertake to build.

So I suggest, and I make this suggestion to the Senator from New Jersey, if the Revenue Marine is transferred to the Navy Department, as I think it should be, it will be necessary for the Navy to have under its control, to put at the service of the Treasury Department, a different class of vessels from the present small gunboats of the Navy. There would go to the Navy Department the present revenue cutters, which would serve their purpose until new ships could be built, and then we should require a class of small light-draft and rapid coast vessels, revenue vessels, also suitable to be used by the Navy for certain war purposes. The two ships which are proposed by the bill would be exactly what would be wanted, whether the Revenue Marine remains with the Treasury Department or passes to the Navy Department.

Instead of putting us in a position of voting down an attempt to get 18-knot ships upon the Pacific coast, instead of putting us in the ungracious position of being unwilling to give the Pacific coast as fleet vessels as can be built, I hope that the Senator from Washington will withdraw his amendment. I beg leave to say to him that no act of Congress will get 18-knot speed out of a 450-ton ship.

Mr. SQUIRE. I believe that if the Treasury Department were fully informed in regard to the situation on that coast, and on the part of the coast that I know most about, they would be willing to recommend, upon the request of the committee for information, a higher rate of speed. But this question has come up, as I said, without my having known of it in time. I do not wish to embarrass Senators by pressing the amendment. I would rather have the bill pass as it is, with the amendment recommended by the committee, than not to have the bill pass; and if it is the opinion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who introduced the bill, and the other Senators who have been advocating it, that I should withdraw the amendment, I will consent to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee is pending, and the Senator from Oregon has moved an amendment to it.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendment to the amendment of the committee be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read: $325,000.

Mr. FRYE. That was the original amount agreed upon in the committee, but in figuring, a mistake was made by the Senator from Oregon and by me, and it was put at $225,000, when it should have been $325,000.

Mr. DOLPH. I read the figure "50" instead of "150." It was not a mistake in addition, but a mistake in reading the letter from the Department.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will not be pressed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was withdrawn.

Mr. SQUIRE. I withdrew the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not regularly offered, only notice of it having been given. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 13, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGALIZING RECORDS OF INDIAN OFFICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to legalizing the records of the Indian Office and authorizing the use of a seal, together with a draft of a bill for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report with regard to the receipt, distribution, and sale of public documents on behalf of the Government by the Department of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT COURTS OF IOWA.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably a certain bill, and am also instructed by the committee to ask for unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will read, after which the Chair will ask if there is objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 123) fixing the time for holding the district and circuit court of the United States in the northern district of Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall be held in the several divisions of the northern district of Iowa at the times herein stated:

In the eastern division at Dubuque on the third Tuesday in April and first Tuesday in December.

In the central division at Fort Dodge on first Tuesday in June and second Tuesday in November.

In the western division at Sioux City on the third Tuesday in May and first Tuesday in October.

In the Cedar Rapids division at Cedar Rapids on the first Tuesday in April and second Tuesday in September.

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process in either of said courts shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change of time in the holding of the terms of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pending, and triable at the terms herein provided for.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to present and ask the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by this committee during the Fifty-second Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 537) to pay to the State of New York the amount reported to be due that State in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and asked that that committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE OF EMPLOYÉS, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. OUTHWAITE also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 577) providing for leave of absence to certain per diem employés of the Government, and asked that that committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3513) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

Mr. MANSUR. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that bill be printed in the RECORD for the information of members.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that that is necessary. This is a public bill and will be printed in the regular way, and that, I think, will meet the convenience of members without printing the bill in the RECORD. It is quite long and would take up several pages of the RECORD. The bill is reported by the joint committee created at the close of the Fifty-first Congress to consider this question of public printing. It embodies the views of that committee and regulates the entire question of public printing and the distribution of public documents, not only printing by Congress—Congressional printing, as it may be termed—but also the printing in the various Departments and bureaus of the Government.

I mention this in order that members who desire to do so may procure copies of the bill at an early day and examine its provisions. I want to say further, if the House will indulge me, that I shall ask the House at an early day to take up this bill and consider it, in order that the question may be disposed of as soon as possible; which is necessary if we are to obtain any benefit at this session from the reforms which the committee have attempted to institute in this matter of public printing.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Printing.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By unanimous consent, bills of the following titles were severally introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

CONSOLIDATION OF CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

By Mr. HARTER: A bill (H. R. 3514) to authorize the consolidation of customs collection districts, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

KENNON COUNTERPOISE BATTERY.

By Mr. TUCKER (by request): A bill (H. R. 3515) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to contract for the purchase of the letters patent granted to the late Beverly Kennon for his invention of a counterpoise battery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REGISTER FOR BARGE SEABIRD, OF NEW JERSEY.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 3516) to provide an American register for the barge Seabird, of New Jersey—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

INCREASED PENSIONS IN CERTAIN CASES.

By Mr. FELLOWS: A bill (H. R. 3517) to increase the pension of those who have lost eyes, limbs, or the use of them, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPAYMENT OF CERTAIN ADVANCES MADE BY MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA.

By Mr. COMPTON: A bill (H. R. 3518) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia for public buildings—to the Committee on Claims.

DAMS ACROSS KANSAS RIVER.

By Mr. OTIS: A bill (H. R. 3519) granting the right to erect and maintain dams across the Kansas River within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SILK CULTURE IN THE UNITED STATES.

By Mr. LONG: A bill (H. R. 3520) for the development and encouragement of silk culture in the United States, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SESSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on Elections to submit the resolution which I send to the desk and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be, and is hereby, authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman has some business which he desires to bring to the attention of the House at this time, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Private bills were, under the order adopted by the House January 5, delivered to the Clerk, and severally referred as follows, namely:

By Mr. ABBOTT: A bill (H. R. 3521) to quiet the title of certain lands in the State of Mississippi, and for the relief of Eli Ayers, or his legal representatives, etc.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3522) for the relief of A. J. Hudson, a citizen of Dallas, Tex.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOATNER: A bill (H. R. 3523) for the relief of the heirs of Sterling T. Austin, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: A bill (H. R. 3524) to place James T. Peale on the retired list of the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 3525) increasing the pension of Rebecca Mayo, a Revolutionary pensioner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 3526) for the relief of William W. Webb—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3527) for the relief of Louisa O. Lovell and others—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARKE of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 3528) for the relief of Timothy Meaher, administrator of J. M. Meaher—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3529) for the relief of the personal representatives of James Rhodes, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COBB of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 3530) for the relief of James Clarkson, Company C, Sixty-ninth Regiment Ohio Infantry—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COMPTON: A bill (H. R. 3531) for the relief of Thomas G. Hayes—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3532) for the relief of Nathan Plummer—to the Committe on Claims.

By Mr. COVERT: A bill (H. R. 3533) for the relief of Frederick, Victor & Achelis, importers and merchants, of the city of New York—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUTTING: A bill (H. R. 3534) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Thomas Garvey with the rank of captain in the mounted service of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DICKERSON: A bill (H. R. 3535) for the relief of L. T. Dix, of Dayton, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ENGLISH: A bill (H. R. 3536) providing for the relief of Charles W. Cronk—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3537) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Newman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORNEY: A joint resolution (H. Res. 53) for the relief of William B. Matchett—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GEARY: A bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of the estate of James T. Sanford, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEISSENHAINER (by request): A bill (H. R. 3539) to provide an American register for the barge Sea Bird, of Perth Amboy, N. J.—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. GRADY (by request): A bill (H. R 3540) for the relief of C. G. Holt, administrator of Wiley Holt, deceased, of Wayne County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HERBERT: A bill (H. R. 3541) for the relief of the heirs of John Mantel, sr., deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3542) for the relief of Weil & Moore—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3543) for the relief of Thomas W. White—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 3544) for the relief of Wilhelmina V. Craus, widow of Samuel M. Craus—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3545) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows, late postmaster at Williamsport, Pa.—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3546) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Bernhard Stueber—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUK of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 3547) for the relief of William H. Turley—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3548) for the relief of D. Framberger, of Knox County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3549) for the relief of W. A. Quarles, administrator of Mary Quarles, deceased, of Jefferson County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3550) for the relief of Thomas Patrick, administrator of Marion Patrick, deceased, of Jefferson County, Tenn., as found due by the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3551) for the relief of James Raither, of Loudon County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3552) for the relief of Preston Kennedy, of Jefferson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio (by request): A bill (H. R. 3553) for the relief of Charles A. de Arnaud—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JONES: A bill (H. R. 3554) for the relief of John S. Braxton—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LAGAN: A bill (H. R. 3555) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri, of New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3556) to provide an American register for the steamer Foxhall, of New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: A bill (H. R. 3557) amending the record of and granting an honorable discharge to James Wilkinson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MANSUR: A bill (H. R. 3558) for relief of Hamilton Crews—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 3559) for the relief of David L. Black, late private Company C, Second United States Volunteers, or "Berdan's Sharpshooters"—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM NEVADA.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, my colleague, Mr. John P. Jones, whose credentials have heretofore been presented, is present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator elect from Nevada will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Jones of Nevada was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. STEWART, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Chris. Marti and other citizens of Long Grove, Iowa, praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of E. V. Nauman and other citizens of Keokuk County, Iowa; the petition of John Homrighaus and other citizens of Bremer County, Iowa, and the petition of J. S. Crawford and other citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of what is known as the option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the eleventh annual session of the Farmers' Congress, held at Sedalia, Mo., praying that State and national laws be so framed that no class or set of men shall derive advantages and benefits at the expense of or to the detriment of the masses of the people; also favoring the election of President by popular vote and the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people of the several States; also that national taxation be limited to the wants of the Government economically and honestly administered, and also praying for other legislation; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Worcester (Mass.) Congregational Club, praying for the ratification of the Brussels agreement; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of 30 citizens of Meade County, S. Dak., praying for the passage of what is known as the Butterworth option bill, prohibiting gambling in agricultural products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 33 citizens of Meade County, S. Dak., praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BRICE presented a petition of George E. Henderson, of New Athens, Ohio, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Elm Tree National Farmers' Alliance, Lodge No. 51, of Buena Vista, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation for the free collection and delivery of mails in the settled rural portions of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of 76 students of Doane College, Crete, Nebr., praying that Congress authorize the loan of $5,000,000 by the National Government to the World's Columbian Exposition on condition that such exposition shall not be managed so as to discredit in any way the American Sabbath; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. JONES of Arkansas presented the petition of Jesse Huston and other members of the First Presbyterian Church of Little Rock, Ark., praying for legislation to prevent the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of J. B. Calton and 47 other citizens and taxpayers of East Hartford, Conn., praying for the free delivery of mails in country districts; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FRYE presented a memorial of shipbuilders and shipowners, of Bath, Me., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 153, to provide American registers for the steamers Foxhall and S. Oteri, of New Orleans, La.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Portland, Me., praying for the transfer of the Revenue Marine Service to the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Amanda Jackson, of Petersburg, Ind., praying to be granted a widow's pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY presented the petition of Benjamin F. Bruner, of Lancaster County, Pa., praying to be allowed an invalid pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I present resolutions and petition of the New York Cotton Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 685, levying a tax on sales for future delivery of cotton, etc., on the ground that it would necessitate the closing up of the commercial exchanges of the country, and asking Congress to refrain from legislation of the kind.

I ask that the resolutions and petition be printed in the RECORD. I believe the bill to which the paper refers was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand not. The paper refers to the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], and that bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I inquire of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] if there has been a like bill referred to the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. PADDOCK. There are three or four bills pending before the Committee on Agriculture on this subject. There is one, and possibly there are two, of like import pending before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and there is one before the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to me that it would be wise to have all these bills in some one committee and to have one committee charged with the responsibility of considering the whole subject and reporting upon it to the Senate. I have no particular personal interest in the matter and no concern about it, except to have the subject fairly and thoroughly treated. It seems to me to be a subject that would properly come within the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Committee. However, I have no care or solicitude as to the particular committee to which the subject shall be referred.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me all the bills on this subject ought to be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as the power to tax depends upon the theory that the properties come within interstate commerce; but I do not desire to make any motion on the subject. I merely rose for the purpose of suggesting that the paper which I presented, referring, as it does, to the bill of the Senator from Minnesota, should be referred to the same committee to which the bill was referred.

Mr. PADDOCK. Undoubtedly it should be, Mr. President.

Mr. WASHBURN. I conferred with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], as I had some doubt in regard to the reference of the bill when I introduced it. It should probably have gone to the Committee on Agriculture, but as I felt that it was pretty sure ultimately to be referred to the Judiciary Committee for a final report, I thought I would ask the reference of the bill in the first place to that committee, as I desired to have an early report and early discussion and action on the bill.

So far as the printing in the RECORD of the memorial, or protest, or argument, or whatever it is, which has been presented by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is concerned, I should have no objection to that proposition, excepting that it is not, as I understand, in accordance with the practice of the Senate. If that is done in this case I have a volume of memorials on the same subject, which I shall ask to have printed also in the same form.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the request for the printing of the paper in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to present preamble and resolutions which were adopted at a meeting of the merchants, manufacturers, and representatives of the municipal government of the city of St. Louis, held at the Merchants' Exchange on November 24, 1891, in regard to the improvement of the Mississippi River, and especially that portion of it between St. Louis and the mouth of the Ohio River, and also containing a report of the legislative committee presented at a meeting of the executive committee held on January 6, 1892, in which they favor an appropriation of $11,000,000 for the improvement of the river from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; and further requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Missouri to support Senate bill 1199, introduced by Senator GIBSON, of Louisiana, entitled "A bill to improve the navigation and to afford ease and safety to the trade and commerce of the Mississippi River, and to prevent destructive floods, by building and repairing and extending the levees and dikes and other works, with an appropriation therefor." Nearly all the representative bodies and organizations of St. Louis are represented in the membership of the executive committee.

I ask that these resolutions and preamble may be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will be so referred.

PRINTING OF A PETITION.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that a petition in the nature of a resolution, adopted by the Eleventh Annual Farmers' Congress, held at Sehalia, Mo., which I presented on the 5th instant, praying for legislation impartial in its advantages and benefits, favoring the election of the President and United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, etc., may be printed as a document. It is brief, and I think for the convenience of Senators it should be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be printed as a document, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. President, I ask the privilege of interrupting the regular order long enough, at this stage, to make a personal explanation and to give the reason for my absence from the regular meeting of the Committee on Coast Defenses, which met yesterday.

In looking over the printed list of the committees as recorded in the daily RECORD I found that the name of my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] was mentioned as a member of that committee, and not myself. I therefore naturally concluded that I was not a member of the committee and that the first announcement was a mistake. This was my reason for being absent. That misapprehension having been removed, I shall in the future be present at its meetings.

Now that I am on my feet, if the Senate will indulge me, I wish to make one other explanation. While the bill reported favorably from that committee yesterday morning is one of great importance, and merits grave consideration, yet had I been present I should have felt constrained, in the present condition of the country and of the people, to have voted against its favorable report. There are, I think, no war clouds visible to give us unusual concern or alarm. No man will be more prompt than myself in voting money for the country's defense whenever the exigencies shall demand it, and to any amount required for defense. It does seem to me, however, that the country is in much greater danger from the burdens of taxation from which the people are suffering than from any invasion from a foreign foe. It occurs to me, therefore, that it would be wiser for us to rather curtail than increase expenditures, and thus avoid the necessity for raising such large sums from the people. Let us first relieve our people, as far as we may, from the present exactions of taxation and then, when the occasion arises, look to the remote and contingent danger from outside.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1379) to provide for a pension for Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Volunteer Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1503) to establish a first-order light-house on North Head, Cape Disappointment, in the State of Washington, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 80) providing for the completion of the public building in the city of Pensacola, Fla., as originally designed, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 53) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 522) for the erection of a public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., reported it with amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 211) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1) for preventing the adulteration and misbranding of food and drugs, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have had under consideration the bill (S. 1434) providing for the loan of money to the farmers of Indiana, and have instructed me to report it back to the Senate and ask to be relieved from the further consideration of the proposition. As the bill relates exclusively to the subject of finance it clearly belongs, we think, to the jurisdiction of the committee having charge of all finance measures, and I am therefore instructed, without any expression whatever as to the views of the committee respecting the merits of the proposition itself, to move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] to this report, who, as the RECORD shows, introduced the bill by request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Finance if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 123) fixing the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 1598) to insure preference in appointment, employment, and retention therein, in the public service of the United States, to veterans of the late war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 1599) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding Federal courts therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAREY introduced a bill (S. 1600) to provide for the completion and repair of quarters, barracks, and stables at Forts Washakie and McKinney, Wyo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1601) to provide for the creation of the Ogden land district, in the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1602) granting a right of way on the Fort Douglas military reservation, in the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1603) for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Ferron, county of Emery, Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1604) to provide for the creation of a fourth judicial district in the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1605) granting a right of way through certain lands of the United States in the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1606) to provide for the reorganization of the judiciary of the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1607) to amend the charter of the Rock Creek Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 1608) to make Punta Gorda, Fla., a port of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1609) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana introduced a bill (S. 1610) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, and for the Southern University of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 1611) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the preparation of plans and specifications for a new custom-house building; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1612) to compensate Thomas G. Hayes for legal services rendered under direction of the Attorney-General; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1613) for the relief of Charles A. de Arnaud; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 1614) for the relief of Rev. William J. Larkin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 1616) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Elizabeth, N. J.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KYLE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 29) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to marriage and divorce; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KYLE. I desire that the joint resolution shall lie on the table for the time being, and I give notice that at an early day I shall move to take up the measure and refer it to the Judiciary Committee; and I also give notice that at that time I shall make a few remarks pertaining to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. HISCOCK (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 30) for the relief of Charles Stoughton, in reference to his services in the Harlem River improvement project, New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 31) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton for the completion of the Harlem River Canal from the Hudson River to the upper end of Randalls Island, commencing the work where the present contractor leaves it, and for the entire work of excavating a canal through the Harlem Kills from the upper end of Randalls Island to the deep water of Long Island Sound; each channel to be 250 feet wide and 15 feet deep at mean low water, except where previous work on the Harlem River channel has exceeded these dimensions; both to be completed on or before the 31st day of May, 1893; the contract price for the completion of the Harlem River Canal to be $970,000; the work to be carried out in strict accordance with Col. Newton's official survey report, as sent up to Congress February 22, 1875, except that the width shall be 250 feet, as above stated, instead of 350 feet; the contract price for the Harlem Kills Channel to be $1,650,000; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SECURITY OF DISTRICT BUILDINGS.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and are hereby, directed to inquire into and to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, if any of the public halls, theaters, or other public buildings within the District of Columbia are specially dangerous to life in case of fire or panic, by reason of height of the auditorium above the street, lack of direct and capacious exits, the presence of boilers or furnaces under the auditorium or stairways leading thereto, defective construction, or for any other causes.

COMMITTEE ON RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Relations with Canada shall hereafter be one of the standing committees of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF FREE MAIL DELIVERY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, instructed to furnish the Senate of the United States with all the information that may be on file in his Department, including copies of reports and statements of post-office inspectors and others, relative to the question of extending the free-delivery system to rural communities, or for substituting said system for that of the present star-route service, as far as the same may be found practicable.

REPORT OF HENRY W. ELLIOTT.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to furnish for the information of the Senate a copy of the report of Henry W. Elliott, made in obedience to the order of an act of Congress approved April 5, 1890, with all maps and illustrations that accompany it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the act refer to?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Elliott was sent out and made his report to the Secretary of the Treasury as required by act of Congress, and it is very desirable and it is very important that that report should be furnished.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may be again reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 123) fixing the time for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask to be relieved from service as chairman of the Committee on Coast Defenses, retaining a position upon the committee as a member.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will be excused, if there be no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] be made chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] be made chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. I ask to be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Patents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming will be excused, if there be no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], who succeeds the late Senator Plumb, be made a member of the Committee on Patents, a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and a member of the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] be made a member of the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS BEFORE THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the regular morning business is through I desire to call up the resolution I submitted on the 11th instant, and I ask that it be read, as I desire to submit a few remarks in relation to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL January 11, 1892, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry as to what legislation, if any, should be enacted by Congress for the purpose of relieving the Court of Claims in the transaction of business before that court, and for expediting such business, and to report to the Senate by bill or otherwise at its earliest convenience.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution is to bring speedily to the attention of the Senate the pressing necessity for such early legislation as will tend to expedite the transaction of business now pending, and which, with alarming rapidity, is constantly accumulating on the calendar of the Court of Claims, and which will bring relief to the judges of and litigants in that overburdened court. Nothing, it seems to me, except a total lack of information as to the amount, importance, and state of the business now pending in that court would justify opposition to some proper and speedy legislation on this subject. The startling facts presented in the report of the Attorney-General and those of his assistants are of themselves amply sufficient not only to justify but induce appropriate and speedy action by Congress looking to the relief of both court and litigants.

During the past few Congresses various acts have been passed largely increasing the jurisdiction of that court, and which, taken together, have resulted in an avalanche of cases that literally overwhelm the court, not merely by the number of cases on the calendar, but also by the magnitude of the interests and amounts involved. Whereas originally the jurisdiction of the court attached only to cases arising under contract, express or implied, now, there are in all, under existing laws, no less than seven sources of jurisdiction, namely, general; specially conferred; Congressional, under what are known as the Bowman and Tucker acts; French spoliation claims; Indian depredation claims; departmental; and District of Columbia. And while this constant enlargement of jurisdiction has been going on nothing has been done of a material character either to enlarge the court or strengthen the aids of the court by increase of clerical force or of the assistants to the Attorney-General, whose Department must, in the protection of the interests of the Government, look after and give attention to this vast amount of business. The only legislation that has been enacted which in any manner tends to lessen the accumulation of business in the Court of Claims is the act of March 3, 1887, conferring upon the circuit and district courts of the United States concurrent jurisdiction in a certain specified class of cases with the Court of Claims.

Under this act, as appears from the report of the Assistant Attorney-General in charge of the business of the Department of Justice in the Court of Claims, there have since its passage been 951 suits brought, 828 of which have been decided, and 123 of which are still pending. But notwithstanding this diversion of business, the startling fact remains that there are now, or were at the date of the report of the Assistant Attorney-General, November 5 last, 19,117 cases pending on the dockets of the Court of Claims. Of these, 1,271 cases arise under general and special jurisdictions; 7,393 under the Bowman-Tucker acts; 4,952 French spoliation claims; 11 departmental cases; 23 District of Columbia cases, and 5,467 Indian depredation cases.

Some conception of the magnitude and importance of this vast number of cases will be had when it is stated that according to the estimate of the Assistant Attorney-General that in the 5,569 petitions filed under the French spoliation act, 2,399 vessels are involved, including claims in the aggregate of about $30,000,000, former estimates made in the Department of Justice having been as high as $42,000,000. Of these 5,569 cases filed under the French spoliation act but 617 have been adjudicated and disposed of or passed upon by the court. Three hundred and twenty-eight of these have been decided favorably to the claimants, 54 unfavorably to the claimants, while 235 petitions have been dismissed; the aggregate amount allowed in cases certified favorably being $2,352,169.52. Of this amount Congress, in the act of March 3, 1891, appropriated $1,304,095.37, covering 250 claims. And as showing the slow progress this court must necessarily make on account of the great number of sources of jurisdiction and the mass of cases constantly accumulating from each source or class, it may be said, as appears from the report of the Assistant Attorney-General, that during the past year out of 97 cases that had been remanded for further proceedings but 14 had been decided after reargument, and 57 petitions argued and submitted. But the number of cases and amounts involved in the French spoliation claims sink into insignificance when compared with the number of cases which have found their way to the docket of the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of the Bowman act.

From 1884 to March 3, 1891, we are told in the report of Assistant Attorney-General Cotton, there were docketed under the Bowman act an aggregate of 8,503 cases; the number docketed each year being as follows:

1887	786	1891	405

The present Assistant Attorney-General hesitates to attempt even an approximate estimate of the aggregate amount of the claims involved in these cases from the fact, as stated by him, in many instances no sum is mentioned in the petition, but he does remind us that former reports of the Attorneys-General have placed the estimate at the enormous sum of $400,000,000.

But passing over the cases arising under the general and special jurisdiction, departmental, and the District of Columbia, I desire to attract attention to the number of cases, amounts involved, and general state of the business in the Court of Claims arising under the Indian depredation act. It is claims arising under this act that the constituency I in part represent are more particularly interested in; and it is a constituency, moreover, than which none are more worthy or more entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress.

The claimants who are to-day attempting to procure by suit in the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the act of the last Congress, that just compensation which was their honest due from this Government in most cases more than a third of a century ago, are of the sturdiest and worthiest of that worthy and noble class of pioneers who, braving the innumerable dangers of frontier life, risking at every step their property and their lives, laid the foundation stones of civilization in the far West, and by their industry, integrity, perseverance, and aggressive natures erected thereon a superstructure of magnificent States, which now add luster, wealth, dignity, and power to the nation. And one main purpose in view at this time on my part is to endeavor to bring about such further and speedy legislation as will properly supplement and make effective the legislation of last Congress in the interest of those who have suffered so much and been neglected so long, and whose just rights have been unreasonably and unjustifiably withheld by this great Government.

Since the passage by Congress, March 3, 1891, of what is commonly known as the Indian depredation act, and prior to November 1 last, 5,467 suits have been docketed under this act in the Court of Claims. The smallest amount claimed in any one action, we are told in his report by Assistant Attorney-General Colby, is $19.75, and the largest amount $1,281,250, while the aggregate amount claimed in the 5,467 actions that have been commenced up to November 1, 1891, is $21,241,908. All of these claims were on November 1 last still pending and undecided. I believe a very few have been disposed of since that date.

The Assistant Attorney-General says:

The number of depredations committed in the several States and Territories for which actions have been commenced, as shown by the petitions on file, is as follows:

State.	No.	State.	No.
Alabama	63	Nevada	30
Arizona	156	New Mexico	1,113
Arkansas	4	Nebraska	156
California	145	Oregon	271
Colorado	125	Texas	1,464
North and South Dakota	179	Utah	151
Georgia	2	Washington	54
Indian Territory	49	Wyoming	83
Idaho	49	States and Territories not designated	671
Iowa	8
Kansas	200	Total	5,101

The Assistant Attorney-General in his report estimates that the aggregate number of claims under the Indian depredation jurisdiction will probably reach a point between 10,000 and 15,000. It is my opinion, however, that the minimum of this estimate is too large. I think it very probable that considerably more than one-half of all the actions that ever could be instituted under this act have already been brought.

But should there be no increase in the number of cases from this source of jurisdiction—and there certainly will be many hundred if not several thousand more cases commenced—it must be apparent to all that, with a docket weighted down, as it is now, with nearly if not quite 20,000 cases—there were on the docket on November 1 last 19,117 cases—it is to this class of claimants, the suits in relation to which have all been docketed since March 3, 1891, little less than a mockery and denial of justice, unless some further legislation is had, either by increasing the number of the judges of the Court of Claims, the number and compensation of the assistant attorneys, the number of the clerical force both in the office of the Attorney-General and the Court of Claims, the appointment of a number of special agents to work in coöperation with the Department of Justice and Court of Claims, or some or all of these, and, in addition, an amendment of the Indian-depredation act conferring concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims on the circuit courts of the United States. Whatever else may be done, I am strongly of the opinion that concurrent jurisdiction should be given to the circuit courts, both as to actions to be commenced and by transfer, at the instance of the claimant, of cases now pending in the Court of Claims. When the Indian-depredation bill was under discussion in the Senate last session I strongly insisted that this should be done. There are many and forcible reasons, other than that arising out of the present burdened docket of the Court of Claims, why this should be done. As it is now, claimants, the most of whom reside from 2,000 to 3,000 miles from Washington, where the court is held, are compelled to come here, or at least have their attorneys come here, at great expense, or employ attorneys residing here. Their Senators and Representatives can not look after this business for them, as they can not appear or practice in the Court of Claims, even though they be lawyers. Had the circuit courts jurisdiction much of the cost and time now necessarily expended could be saved to claimants. Each claimant could then have his case brought, investigated, and decided in a tribunal sitting within the boundaries of his own State.

Now, Mr. President, in what has been said there must be no inference to the effect that the Court of Claims or any of its able and industrious justices are in any manner responsible for the present condition of things, the present overburdened state of the docket in that court, or in any degree subject to any censure on account thereof. On the contrary, my information is, and the reports of the Attorney-General and his assistants, as well as the records and reports of the court itself, confirm this, that the court is and has been diligent in the exercise of official duty, the judges bringing to the discharge of such duty industrious, able, and faithful effort; and the same must undoubtedly be said of the Assistant Attorneys-General and assistant attorneys who have had charge of the business of the Government in this court.

There were disposed of during the past year by the court, by trial or otherwise, 653 cases; the amounts claimed in these cases, according to the report of the Attorney-General, being $7,377,011.54. Of these, 489 cases were decided favorably to the United States, and 164 favorably to the plaintiffs; the aggregate amount allowed to plaintiffs being $700,817.86. This statement does not include, says the Assistant Attorney-General, "Cases prepared and tried and now under advisement, neither does it include many cases prepared and tried and afterwards removed, for various reasons, to the general docket."

It is quite evident, therefore, from this showing, that no blame can properly attach to the court for the present enormous calendar of cases in that court. The fault is elsewhere—it rests not with the court; not with the Department of Justice, but with Congress. The Congress should apply the remedy, and it should be done without any unnecessary delay. A spirit of intelligent dispatch should characterize the action of Congress in this regard. With 20,000 cases now on the docket, and assuming there are to be no further cases docketed—and they are being docketed by the scores every day—it would require, disposing on an average 653 cases annually, the number disposed of the past year, over thirty years to clear the docket. The situation is farcical. It is ridiculous in the extreme. It is absurd. It is a travesty on justice. I move the adoption of the resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to formulate and report a remedy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Indian Depredations of the last Congress, which was instrumental in connection with the Senator from Oregon, who has just taken his seat [Mr. MITCHELL], in conferring jurisdiction to adjudicate Indian-depredation claims upon the Court of Claims, I desire to say that I agree to the passage of the resolution. I also agree to everything which has been said by the Senator, except to the proposition that the law ought to be changed so as to send the adjudication of the Indian-depredation cases to the local courts. The Senator's proposition is that, instead of having them all adjudicated here in the Court of Claims, as was the decision of the last Congress, concurrent jurisdiction shall be given so that a large share, possibly all of the cases, may be brought in the local United States courts in Oregon, Wyoming, Kansas, and other States where Indian depredations took place.

Mr. President, this question was pretty thoroughly canvassed by the committees in the last Congress and the decision was, I thought, reached with a great deal of unanimity, to the effect that the jurisdiction to try and determine these $25,000,000 of claims should be kept here in Washington in the Court of Claims.

There was another proposition, and that was that there should be a special tribunal, a special court, created for the adjudication of these claims. That was the favorite project with the claimants and their counsel, but as an upshot of the whole discussion in the two committees and the two Houses of Congress it was at last agreed, as I thought, by a general consensus of opinion, that to relieve a pressing necessity, which was the adjudication of these cases, they should all be put into the Court of Claims. I was not prepared, therefore, to have the Senator from Oregon come here at this time and plead for an unsettling of that decision and for the opening of all of those other courts to the trial of these claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I will say that if he or any other Senator or a majority of the Senate can point out or suggest any way by which this great accumulation of cases in the Court of Claims can be reached in any reasonable time, then I would prefer to abide by the legislation as it stands.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with what the Senator has said in reference to the necessity of legislation to strengthen the Court of Claims; but I do not see why Indian depredation cases should be taken out of that court any more than why the Bowman act cases should be taken out of that court, or why the French spoliation cases should be taken out of that court. The present method has been deliberately adopted by Congress, and it is a method which I trust will be adhered to.

I had the honor of presenting to the Senate a letter from Chief Justice Richardson, in which he stated his opinion that the Court of Claims would be able to adjudicate these cases. It was but the repetition of a letter written several years before to the Senator from Oregon on my right [Mr. DOLPH], in which he stated that the Court of Claims could do this work, do it well, and do it speedily, and I believe now that the Court of Claims can, by such a bill as may be reported from the Judiciary Committee and as may pass this Congress, be put in condition to do this work and to do it within a reasonable period.

I admit that the work is heavy. The Senator from Oregon has placed before the Senate a statement of the number of claims, vast in number and vast in amount, pending before the Court of Claims. The figures are to be found also in the report of the very able Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. John B. Cotton, dated November 5, and the accompanying report of the diligent Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. L. W. Colby, of Nebraska, in special charge of Indian depredation cases. The Senator has not overstated the difficulty and the evil, and I only differ with him as to the remedy which should be applied.

I believe that the Court of Claims should be increased in the number of its judges and that there should be some statutory provision for governing the method of doing business, a method, perhaps, which shall result in the trial of questions of fact by less than the whole court, which shall limit appeals in cases of small amounts, and which shall enable the court to promptly decide all cases which are submitted to it.

I believe also, Mr. President, that larger means should be provided to the Department of Justice to enable it to defend these cases. It is no slight duty for the Attorney-General, the Assistant Attorney-General, and all their assistants to defend $23,000,000 of Indian depredation cases. It is no slight duty for them to make proper defense to the Bowman-act cases, which the Senator has stated and the Assistant Attorney-General, Mr. Cotton, says have been estimated as involving $400,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was about to say that the responsibility of the Attorney-General and his assistants is aggravated very much by having to defend some $30,000,000 spoliation claims and $400,000,000 claims under the Bowman-Tucker acts.

Mr. CHANDLER. The labor and the difficulty are very great, and the Attorney-General should be strengthened by an addition to his force and by such sums of money as will enable him to make proper defense. The Committee on the Judiciary should provide additional methods, and the Committee on Appropriations should provide additional money, and these cases should be defended as they ought to be defended, and a speedy adjudication of them should be secured.

Mr. President, I concur in everything which the Senator has said in reference to the desirability of a prompt decision of these cases. The Government of the United States is frequently swindled by the payment of unjust claims, and the Government of the United States also frequently does enormous injustice by its delay in paying just claims. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," and among many of the claimants in the Indian-depredation cases, and, I may say, in the class of cases known as the Bowman-act cases, are men and women and children who are going to wreck and ruin financially and mentally because they can get no decision from the Government as to the validity or invalidity of their claims.

Therefore, I believe that there should be legislation exactly in the direction of this resolution, and that we should do these claimants the justice either to say their claims are to be paid and then to pay them, or else to say that the claims are unjust and not well founded and that we will not pay them.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Oregon wish to speak on the pending subject?

Mr. DOLPH. I do, but I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, which I should like to have read at length, as it relates to the very matter which the Senator desires to speak upon. The bill, without some amendment, does not entirely and in all respects meet my desire, but it is substantially according to my desire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appointed in the manner provided by law two additional judges for the Court of Claims, who shall hold office for the same term and receive the same compensation as is now provided for the judges of said court. Continuous service, past or future, for the term mentioned in section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, either as a judge or chief justice, or both, of said court, shall entitle the person rendering or to render such service to the benefits of said section.

SEC. 2. Said court shall hereafter sit in two divisions of three judges each, of whom two shall be a quorum, and the concurrence of a like number shall be required for a decision in any case. Seven judges shall constitute a full bench, four of whom shall be a quorum, and the concurrence of four judges shall be required for a decision in any case. All cases shall be heard in the first instance before one of said divisions, except that the full bench may direct that a case be heard in the first instance before it. Each of said divisions shall be presided over by the chief justice, or judge senior in commission then present. The findings, decrees, and judgments of each division, or of the full bench, as the case may be, shall be deemed the findings, decrees, and judgments of the Court of Claims. Motions for new trials shall be made in the divisions, or in the full bench, as the case may be, where the cause is heard in the first instance; but a division shall certify a motion for new trial dependent upon questions of law only to be heard before the full bench; when granted by the full bench, the case shall be heard by a division or the full bench, as it shall order.

SEC. 3. Appeals from the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States shall be allowed on behalf of the United States from all judgments or decrees adverse to the United States, and on behalf of the claimant only in cases where the amount in controversy shall exceed $5,000, or when it shall be made to appear to the full bench that the decision will affect a class of cases involving in the aggregate at least $5,000; or that the question involved is of such special importance as to require the decision of the Supreme Court.

SEC. 4. All laws now in force relating to the Court of Claims, so far as consistent with this act, shall remain in force, and all laws inconsistent therewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, when I entered the Senate I found, my attention being called to the matter by some of my constituents, that Congress for more than a quarter of a century had failed to make provision for the payment of Indian depredation claims, except in an occasional case, for which provision was made by special bill, and in which the facts were exceptionally strong, notwithstanding there was upon the statute book an act, which had been in force ever since 1834, and which was a mere reënactment of previous legislation, by which claimants for compensation for Indian depredations were required or at least permitted to present their claims to the Secretary of the Interior, and under which the claims were examined and either allowed or disallowed by the Secretary and reported to Congress. I endeavored to find in the Senate or in the other House some sentiment in favor of the payment of such claims. I became satisfied that the proposition to make an appropriation to pay the claims allowed by the Secretary of the Interior met with so little favor that it would be impossible to secure legislation for that purpose. There seemed to be on the part of members of Congress some distrust as to whether the claims had been properly examined, and as to whether the reports of the Secretary of the Interior could be relied upon to such an extent that Congress would be justified in making the appropriation for their payment.

I introduced a bill somewhat similar in its provisions to the bill which was passed during the last session of Congress, referring all depredation claims or, I should say, certain depredation claims (the bill contained certain limitations as to the time when they accrued, etc.), to the Court of Claims, and on the 16th day of April, 1886, I made a very elaborate speech on the subject of Indian depredation claims, in which I attempted to ascertain the true relations, legal and equitable, between the Indians and the General Government, and to trace the legislation which had been had concerning the subject and concerning the payment of Indian depredation claims, and also to follow the history of the Interior Department in adjudicating these claims. At the time I thought in regard to the matter of a tribunal to adjudicate these claims much the same as the Senator from New Hampshire. In order that I might not, by any proposed legislation, be instrumental in putting too great a burden of business upon the Court of Claims, I wrote to the chief justice of the court, inclosing a copy of my bill, and received a letter from him upon the subject of the ability of the court to take care of the claims, which I made part of my speech, and which I now send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

COURT OF CLAIMS CHAMBERS,
Washington, February 23, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, with a copy of Senate bill No. 1407, "in relation to Indian depredations."

You say that you "have been informed that the impression is prevalent, to some extent, that the Court of Claims would be unable to dispose of any considerable addition to the business now before it," and you ask me to inform you whether it would be possible for the court to dispose promptly of cases which might arise under this bill should it become a law, and whether any changes in existing law would be necessary to enable the court to determine the causes which might go before it, should the bill be passed by Congress.

The impression to which you refer is an erroneous one. Although the business of the court has been largely increased of late, no difficulty has been or is likely to be found in disposing of it as fast as the parties are ready for trial.

Of course the judges are required to work somewhat harder, but of that they do not complain. They always hold themselves in readiness cheerfully and promptly to do whatever business Congress sees fit to put upon them.

When the Bowman bill which became the "act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government" (22 Stat. at Large, 485), was before a committee of Congress, the judges made reply to a similar request, as follows:

"The business of the court has frequently been increased by special matters of jurisdiction referred to it by Congress, such as the abandoned and captured property cases, under the act of March 12, 1863; cases against the District of Columbia, under the act of June 16, 1880, and numerous cases and classes of cases referred by private acts. It is found that such cases bring in new litigants and new counsel, who prepare and submit their cases while others are in preparation and do not obstruct the general business. Litigants are always promptly heard whenever their cases are ready for submission, and the court promptly decides them, and the business has never been in arrears, so that the extent of business which the court may transact can hardly be estimated."

Further experience with the business of that act before the court has confirmed the views there expressed.

I have no doubt that the court, with no additional assistance, would be able to do promptly all the business that would come to it if the present bill becomes a law.

I send herewith a copy of the History, Jurisdiction, and Practice of the Court of Claims, from which you will get a full account of the business of the court.

I am, very truly, yours, etc.,

WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON,
Chief Justice.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH, Senator, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the presentation I made of this subject at the time seemed to me to fall upon rather inattentive ears, but I am pleased to believe that it has borne fruit, as portions of it appeared afterwards in an elaborate report made from a House committee upon the subject of Indian depredation claims, and I have reason to believe it was serviceable to the special committee appointed by the Senate to consider the subject at the last session.

Before any legislation was secured upon the subject I changed my mind about the proper place to send these claims for adjudication, and I entirely disagree with the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to it. I became convinced that suits upon such claims would be better tried, that the interests of the Government would be better protected, and that the convenience of the claimants would be promoted by permitting the suits to be brought in the district and circuit courts of the United States, and with this view I went to the chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Indian Depredation Claims and suggested to him a plan which was embodied in the bill as reported from the committee and as it passed the Senate. The provision is as follows:

That the district courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims as to all matters named in the preceding section where the amount of the claim does not exceed $2,000, and the circuit courts of the United States shall have concurrent jurisdiction in all cases where the amount of such claim exceeds $2,000 and does not exceed $10,000.

It was thought wise by the committee, no doubt, and that was my suggestion also, that the larger claims, involving more than $10,000, should be sent here for trial in the Court of Claims, where the Attorney-General and his assistants should have charge of them on the part of the United States. The bill, as reported with this provision in it, passed the Senate. The bill was a House bill. The bill reported by the committee to the Senate was adopted as an amendment to the House bill, and therefore the whole matter went into a committee of conference. The committee of conference changed the bill so as to require all suits to be brought in the Court of Claims.

If it had not been during the last stage of the session, when the probability was that if the report of the committee of conference was not accepted we should obtain no legislation upon a subject on which Congress should have acted a quarter of a century ago, I should have opposed the report of the conference committee. I believe the sentiment in favor of sending these claims to the Court of Claims was worked up by local agents, attorneys, or parties here in Washington, who desired to litigate the claims here. I believe that the district attorneys of the several districts would be better qualified, on account of their knowledge of local affairs and of witnesses, to try these cases on behalf of the United States than any assistant attorney-general would be to try all such cases here at the national capital arising in all districts from which such claims will be presented. I believe the district or circuit courts would have been better able to judge of the just weight to be given to the testimony of witnesses, and in some cases, as in Oregon, the court itself would have had such knowledge of the prices of commodities and of the Indian difficulties as would have peculiarly qualified it to try these cases, and would have prevented any imposition upon the Government by exaggerated statements as to values or otherwise.

I think, if Congress wishes now to relieve the Court of Claims, the judicious thing to do, the economical thing to do, the thing to be done in the interests of these claimants, is to give to the district and circuit courts jurisdiction of these claims at least up to the amount of $10,000—concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims. If the claimant desires to come here and sue in the Court of Claims let him do so, but if he desires to institute his suit at home give him the opportunity.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very much pleased, Mr. President, that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has presented this resolution and brought to the attention of the Senate and the country the magnitude of the business that is imposed upon the Court of Claims. I am particularly pleased that information is given as to the status of the vast number of cases arising under the Indian depredation act.

As Senators will remember, that act was a compromise act. It was only secured through a great deal of concession and patience on the part of those who had it in charge at the last hours of the session. I think, with both Senators from the State of Oregon, that all Senators who come from States at all familiar with this character of claims realize the importance and the propriety of giving concurrent jurisdiction to the Federal courts in the vicinity of the depredations as well to the Court of Claims. Many of the members of the Senate and members of the committee at that time appreciated the desirability of what is asked for now. The letter read at the desk a few moments ago had a great and, I may say, a controlling influence in the action that was taken in regard to this matter.

I am free to say that from the beginning, with the knowledge I had of the deferred treatment of these claims, I felt that equity and justice to the claimants required the creation of a special tribunal which should have jurisdiction concurrently with the Federal courts to take these matters up and deal with them promptly. They had grown old, parties were dying off, evidence was being lost, so that unless something was done and done speedily, even the opportunity of adjudication would be of little value to these people. Now, the bill having been enacted into a law, on account of the lack of appropriation these claimants find themselves practically in the condition they were before the enactment of the law.

I most heartily agree with the suggestion of the Senators from Oregon that concurrent jurisdiction should be conferred upon the Federal courts. It appears to me that it is both to the interest of the public and to the interest of the claimants. It is a great distance for many of these persons in the condition they find their proofs to come across the continent, 1,500, 2,000, and 3,000 miles, to have their claims adjudicated. In many cases it will be found less expensive, more speedy, and afford a more convenient opportunity to adduce the evidence, if trial can be had in the part of the country where the depredation occurred, and when such is the situation the doors of the courts should be open.

I can not see where injustice can be done to the Government, and already, under my observation of the operation of the law, I can see where claimants would be aided consistently with the protection of the rights of the Government if allowed to go into the Federal courts in the vicinity of the places where the depredations were committed, and where the witnesses are available and the proofs in easy reach.

For want of sufficient appropriation parties are prevented from taking proof in pending suits. It is useless to cite witnesses to appear before officers to testify when no provision is made for the Government being represented, and as a result parties will be deprived of evidence they would secure were it not for this fault of the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I greatly sympathize with what has been said upon this floor in favor of an early consideration and adjudication of the Indian depredation claims. It is a subject that concerns many of my constituents, and is a subject in regard to which, during my Congressional experience, I have given considerable attention.

I had the honor of serving on the committee that considered this subject in the other House, and I was a member of the conference committee that finally agreed upon the bill which became a law. As the bill passed the House of Representatives, it provided for an independent tribunal to hear and adjudicate these claims. We, in the other House, thought that the better method. We thought it was better that a tribunal should be created which could give exclusive attention to these claims; that its principal court should be held here, but giving the court authority to visit the different sections of the country where the claimants lived, and where the claims could be thoroughly and carefully investigated, and with little expense to claimants.

That provision of the bill did not seem to meet the judgment or approval of this body, and, as has been suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the bill was amended so as to give to the Court of Claims and to the existing Federal courts jurisdiction of the subject. When that bill went into the hands of the conference committee, as thus amended, the question came up whether it was best to give to the Court of Claims and to the Federal courts in the several States and Territories concurrent jurisdiction. It was urged in opposition to that proposition that the line of policy observed, that the construction given to the statutes, that the rights given to the claimants under the law, might not harmonize, might not agree, and while in one jurisdiction one policy or line would be observed, in another jurisdiction an entirely different line might be observed.

Senators who have given attention to this subject know that the act confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction and the right to adjudicate as against such Indians as were in amity with the Government of the United States when the depredations were committed. Naturally, the question arises, what does that mean, "when in amity with the Government of the United States;" and no two courts, perhaps, would give to that provision of the statute the same construction.

So the conference committee, when considering this subject, concluded that it was best that some single tribunal should have jurisdiction. The other House thought that it was better that an independent and new tribunal should be created. This body differed with the other House in that particular. Then when the conference committee, as I have suggested, was considering it, it concluded that it was better that some single tribunal should have jurisdiction of the subject; and as this body had decided that it would not consent to a new and independent tribunal the conference committee agreed that it should go exclusively to the Court of Claims.

There were many reasons that entered into the action of the conference committee, and, as I believe, actuated the two Houses of Congress in finally consenting to the bill. One of these was that the United States district attorneys in the several States and Territories would not get, under the bill as it passed the other House, and as it passed the Senate, additional compensation for the necessary work that would be imposed upon them in connection with these cases. Labor would be, under the bill, imposed upon them for which no compensation was provided, and hence it was likely to be performed indifferently. Then, again, it was thought that it would cost more to the claimants to impose upon them the necessity of going to the Federal courts in their several States and Territories for the prosecution of these claims than to permit them to be prosecuted here in the Court of Claims. As is known to all, in the Court of Claims the personal attendance of witnesses is not desired or even permitted.

The depositions of the claimants and the depositions of their witnesses would be taken at their homes and without any considerable expense to them except the expense of employing their local attorneys, and getting their witnesses to the notary public before whom the depositions are taken, while to impose upon claimants the necessity to take their witnesses to the Federal courts and keep them there until their claims could be investigated and their cases decided and adjudicated would, in the judgment of the conference committee, impose an expense upon them that, in many instances at least, would be an absolute deprivation and denial of justice.

That was an important consideration which came before the committee of conference for determination. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] rather reflects upon that conference committee, and indicates or intimates that it, perhaps, was influenced by local considerations or arguments or suggestions that were made to it by attorneys here. I desire to say to the Senator from Oregon that I do not think one member of that conference committee was influenced by any such consideration. The duty that was imposed upon that conference committee was an important one, and the measure came to the conference committee, as the Senator suggests, in the closing days of the last session of Congress. But that conference committee realized the necessity and importance of some legislation on the subject, and it realized, as has been suggested, that many of these claimants have been knocking at the doors of justice and at the doors of Congress for more than twenty-five years for redress and for money that they ought to have received years and years ago to make them good for losses sustained and injuries suffered. Hence the conference committee was anxious that some legislation should be secured, and the best possible, and I am still disposed to believe, as I did then, that the bill as finally agreed upon by the two Houses of Congress is better than to give to the Federal courts of the several States and Territories jurisdiction of this subject. My judgment was that we had better have a new and independent tribunal, but if that could not be secured, then that the jurisdiction had better be given, as it was given, to the Court of Claims.

In connection with the subject I visited the Court of Claims and had a conversation with the chief justice, and he said to me substantially, as he said to the Senator from Oregon in the letter which has been read at the desk, that that court could do this business, that it could hear and adjudicate these claims without any considerable expense to the claimants, except the necessary expense of employing counsel, and that it could do it expeditiously and well.

I desire to say now that it is not the fault of the court that many of the claims have not been adjudicated, but it is because Congress has not given to the Department of Justice the necessary assistance that the Government may prepare itself for the trial of these cases. That is the difficulty. The Department of Justice has now before this body a recommendation asking for $17,000, and that is all, to give it additional assistance so that it may prepare itself for trial in all these cases. The estimate and recommendation of the Department is that with the appropriation of $17,000 and a little more it can get ready to consider these cases and try them expeditiously, and that that appropriation, with the appropriation that was made at the last Congress, will carry this business until the 1st of July, when the next annual appropriation will be available.

Of course, unless there is some additional provision made, the Department of Justice has not the assistance to give attention to these cases as they deserve. As has been suggested here, more than six thousand suits have already been brought in the Court of Claims. The necessity is imposed upon the Department of Justice to resist these claims, to investigate them, to hear what depositions are taken, to cross-examine witnesses and get ready for trial, and with the assistance of one Assistant Attorney-General and two clerks it is impossible for it to do so. That is what has caused the delay and not the business existing in the Court of Claims.

I have had some conversation with the Assistant Attorney-General who is in charge of this business. I know he is anxious to dispose of it rapidly and fairly to claimants and to the Government, but with the little assistance that has been given to him it has been impossible for him to get ready for trial in many of these cases. I am told that a number have been submitted on agreed statements to the court, and probably will be disposed of soon by the court.

I speak of this to show the disposition that is being made and the spirit which is manifested by the Department and by the court to dispose of this business rapidly and fairly to all concerned.

My judgment is, as I thought then, that if we can give to the Court of Claims the additional justices suggested by the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and then to the Department of Justice the assistants it ought to have, we can dispose of these cases with less expense and cost to the claimants, and, in the end, with more satisfaction to all, than by giving to all the Federal courts in the country concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims.

My observation has been that it is very expensive for claimants to take their witnesses to the Federal courts and wait the convenience of the courts that their grievances may be investigated and disposed of. The Federal courts in my State are 350 miles from many of the residents of that State, and to impose upon them the necessity of taking their witnesses there and waiting the convenience of the courts and waiting the time when their cases can be reached and disposed of, would, as I have already observed, in very many cases work an absolute deprivation of justice.

I hope that the Senate will take no hasty action in a matter so important to thousands of litigants in the country as is this question.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I suppose that district attorneys would receive the same fees for defending cases brought under an act which referred claims for Indian depredations to the district and circuit courts that they receive in other cases tried by them. They receive a salary and in addition they receive fees, which, of course, are not large in any one case, but having a large number of cases they get a reasonable compensation, and many of them are not allowed to retain all the fees which they earn, because the aggregate is larger than the maximum compensation which is allowed to them by law.

So much for the fees of district attorneys. Now, in regard to witnesses, the bill as it passed the Senate and the act as it now stands, with the slight amendment of the section necessary to make it conform to the amendment which was made in regard to the courts that should have jurisdiction, is as follows:

That the said courts shall make rules and regulations for taking testimony in the causes herein provided for by deposition or otherwise, and such testimony shall be taken in the county where the witness resides when the same can be conveniently done, and no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is party to or interested in said suit, and any claimant or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

So it will be seen by the Senate that, so far as the objection made to conferring jurisdiction on the district and circuit courts on account of the convenience of witnesses is concerned, the act itself answers the objection when it provides that the courts may order the testimony taken by deposition and in the county where the witness resides. Further than that, under existing laws testimony can be taken by the deposition of a witness who resides 100 miles from the place of trial or out of the State.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I have failed to hear any very good reason yet for the change of jurisdiction, for the investigation, adjudication, of these cases. However, after what has been said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and others as to the overburdened condition of the calendar of the Court of Claims I am disposed to vote for the resolution, particularly as it is one for a simple inquiry only.

Having had some responsibility as a member of the Committee on Indian Depredation Claims and of the conference committee which finally perfected the measure which was afterwards enacted into law, I desire to say that I was in accord with the view of the other House in the first instance, that an independent tribunal created specially for the purpose would be the best tribunal that could be created to have jurisdiction of this subject; but after the statement came which is in the document I hold in my hand, to which the Senator from Oregon has called attention, from the chief justice of the Court of Claims, that that court was in a situation to take up this business in addition to that they already had, and to give it speedy attention and make a rapid adjudication of these claims, I gave up the idea of an independent tribunal and joined with the friends in the Senate, who in their numbers embraced a very large proportion of the membership of the Senate, in favor of imposing this duty upon the Court of Claims.

Nothing has come to us yet from the Court of Claims nor from the Attorney-General or any other official source indicating that they may not do as the chief justice said they would be able to do, speedily adjudicated these claims when Congress shall give them the ability through proper support to carry out the investigation. I happen to know from personal knowledge, as very many of my constituents are interested in it, and it has been my duty to inquire frequently as to the progress made, that there has been no ability on the part of the Department of Justice to advance the prosecution, the examination, the investigation, and the adjudication of the claims, because they have had little or no money to meet the expense of even the preliminary work. The bill was passed very hastily. It was considered at the time, as has been before said, that it was a compromise measure. Everybody was a friend of the proposition, but it was not found advisable to do what ought to have been done at that time, to put in the bill the appropriation that was necessary in order to advance this work. So the Department has been struggling and stumbling along trying to perform the duty imposed upon it, but wholly unable, because it had not the means necessary to prosecute these investigations.

A very able and a very energetic man is the Assistant Attorney-General of the Department having charge of these cases, and I know from what he says concerning the situation in the Department in connection with this business that if Congress will be only reasonably liberal in making the appropriations to sustain the Department in its prosecution of the claims no complaint will be made in a very few months as to delays in these investigations or the denial of justice through such delays. I am sure that the Department is not trying to obstruct nor the court to postpone these adjudications. All has been done that could have been properly done under the circumstances. What we should do is to strengthen the hands both of the Department of Justice and the court, and then let well enough alone.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate longer to discuss the merits of the question which was raised by the latter portion of the remarks of the Senator from Oregon. Whenever the question comes before the Senate on the proposition to enlarge the jurisdiction of the local Federal courts by giving them power to adjudicate these cases, the subject will doubtless be fully discussed before any legislation is had. Fortunately we have with us the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], who was on the conference committee of the other House, and who stated, with force and directness, the reasons which actuated the conference committee in reaching the conclusion that these $23,000,000 of claims should be tried before one tribunal alone, and that tribunal the Court of Claims.

I only desire to add, in reply to the remark of the Senator from Oregon, to the effect that he thinks the Court of Claims was preferred because a sentiment in favor of that tribunal had been worked up by the claim agents, that on the contrary the influence, if there was any exerted, on the part of attorneys for claimants, was wholly in the direction of a special tribunal. I do not believe a single suggestion in behalf of the Court of Claims came from any claim agent. I see now, upon the floor of the Senate but one Senator, I do not see the others, who were then upon the Senate Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, who do not reside in States where claims of this sort have arisen, but I think that all of those Senators were in favor of having the cases adjudicated in the Court of Claims; and I am entirely sure, and I beg so to assure the Senator from Oregon, that the advocates of the placing of these cases in the Court of Claims, and not in the local tribunals, were actuated solely by the conviction that the public interests would thus be best promoted. The influence, if there was any, I repeat, of the claim agents, and I may add of the claimants, was in favor of a special tribunal or a local tribunal, while the arguments which were adduced and which finally convinced the conference committee of both Houses in favor of one tribunal, and that the Court of Claims, were considerations solely concerning the public good.

Mr. MITCHELL obtained the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. Will my colleague yield to me for one moment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I should not prolong this discussion at all if the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had not repeated substantially what was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. I did not propose to make any reply to the Senator from Kansas concerning his criticism of what I said when upon the floor before, because I knew that what I said was being taken down by the reporter, and would appear as it was taken down. I did not say anything that by any fair means could be construed into a reflection upon the committee of conference, according to my recollection of what I said. Certainly it was far from my intention to make any reflection upon them.

I said substantially, according to my present recollection, that the sentiment in favor of the adjudication of these claims in the Court of Claims was due to the matter having been worked up by the agents of these claimants in this city. But in saying that it must be remembered that I had already referred to a bill introduced by me in the Forty-eighth or Forty-ninth Congress in which I had proposed to refer all these claims to that court, and that I had read here in the Senate the letter from the chief justice of the Court of Claims to the effect that the court could take jurisdiction and dispose of these claims. I did not say whether that influence had been exerted in the Forty-eighth or Forty-ninth Congress when I introduced the bill which I did, when I made the speech which I have referred to, or whether it had been later; and there was no occasion for any supposition that I had attempted to criticise the committee of conference.

I do insist that the proper place to have sent these claims was the courts of the United States. I am not in favor of special tribunals, and never have been. During the first Congress I was in the Senate I made some remarks upon the bill providing for the adjudication of private land claims, in which I advocated the proposition that matters relating to private land claims should be referred to the existing courts, to be examined and decided by the existing circuit courts of the United States in accordance with the law and the practice of those courts.

We have lately in the Senate provided for a circuit court of appeals. It was unfortunate that we did not provide for an additional circuit judge in each circuit, and make the court an independent court. When that is done and the circuit judges are relieved from nisi prius duty, when jurisdiction is given to the district judges to hear and determine cases now brought in both the district and circuit courts, we shall have a complete judiciary system, which will be ample to meet every requirement, only occasionally creating a new district and appointing a new district judge. In my judgment it would be wise if every question of Federal cognizance that arises should be referred to the existing courts, and that there should be no special tribunals created, except, of course, the Court of Claims and tribunals here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I repeat, I insist that the economical thing for the Government, the convenient thing for claimants, the safe thing for the United States, would have been to have referred all the Indian-depredation claims to the existing courts. If the Court of Claims, a single court, can take jurisdiction of these claims and dispose of them, how easily would the various district and circuit courts of the United States have disposed of them and how rapidly? It would have scarcely delayed the business in any one of those courts. The district attorneys would have been upon the ground; they could have looked up the testimony that was necessary for the defense of the United States against these claims; the witnesses would, many of them, have been known to the courts and to the district attorney; their credibility could have been ascertained, and the cases could have been safely and economically tried.

When the Government of the United States has a claim against an individual, it goes to the courts of the Government in the States, and sues the individual in any State where he may be found, no matter where he resides. There ought to be some reciprocity in this matter. The citizen should be allowed to bring his claim to the court of the district in which he lives, and have it adjudicated by the court, and, if it requires a jury trial, have the facts found by his peers and his neighbors.

I did not intend to say anything against either claimants or their attorneys who congregate about the national capital. Some of them are my friends. They are in the main, as I understand, very fair lawyers and reputable men. It is natural that they should insist that all the legal business of the country should be brought here to the national capital; it is a matter of convenience to them, and gives them employment; it is that out of which they live. Sir, they hang about both branches of Congress whenever it is in session; they are here to secure the passage of claims through Congress, and often by their aid—I will not say by their illegitimate work, but often by their assistance—the least meritorious claims pass both Houses of Congress and become laws and they share in the proceeds, when claims that are more meritorious fail because they are not represented in the same way.

I think we have all been rather discouraged after taking up in the Senate some meritorious claim and securing the passage of a bill, supposing that all our labor was in the interest of some one of our constituents, to find afterwards that a controversy has arisen as to whether some local claim agent here should have one-quarter or one-third or one-half of the claim.

But I did not rise to discuss this question at this time. I rose to defend myself against the imputation of having intended to cast any reflection upon the committee of conference at the last session. I think they made a mistake. I think these claims could have been safely and properly adjudicated by the local courts of the United States. That is the place where they should have gone.

Mr. MITCHELL. The resolution which I had the honor of introducing and which is the pending measure, although an important one, is rather harmless. The resolution which we have been discussing does not propose to change any law; it does not propose to increase or decrease the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; it does not propose to transfer any jurisdiction now possessed by that court to any other court or courts; it does not propose to increase the number of Assistant Attorneys-General or of the assistant attorneys of the Department of Justice; it does not propose to make any appropriation. All it does propose is to instruct a certain committee of this body, the Committee on the Judiciary, to look into a certain subject, and to make such recommendation to the Senate as that committee may deem proper to make after they shall have considered the whole subject. That is all there is in the resolution, and therefore, unless some other member of the Senate desires to discuss it further, I should like to see a vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. It occurs to me to say to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that whatever responsibility there is for this protracted discussion is with himself, because he himself opened a general discussion upon the general merits of a proposition which is to come up hereafter, but which is not properly here now, through the introduction of his resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HALE. And at the moment when the resolution was going through.

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, when it was practically agreed to. The entire discussion has been premature and a little extravagant, to my notion. But when the whole subject-matter, which has been so liberally discussed in all its imaginary comprehensiveness, is properly before us, I beg to say to the Senator that we can then discuss it to better purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is not very important. It probably would not interest him. The Senator can read it in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rather suspect the Senator is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. PADDOCK. What I rose for a moment ago was to correct the statement made by my distinguished friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that all the Senators upon the Committee on Indian Depredations who were interested specially in this legislation were primarily in favor of the Court of Claims having jurisdiction of the subject. That is a mistake. They were all opposed to that amendment at the outset.

I for one, as was my distinguished friend, the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN], was in favor of an independent tribunal. My distinguished friend from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], as I remember, was in favor of imposing the duty of these investigations upon the local courts, or at least in giving them—the circuit and district courts—very large concurrent jurisdiction. I was brought to this conclusion, as others were, that the Court of Claims should be designated as the tribunal to bring these cases before by the attitude and the arguments of the influential minority in that committee, who were willing to assent to the passage of the bill, and of whom my friend from New Hampshire was one of the most conspicuous. Now, I think it better not to change the jurisdiction, at least not until the Court of Claims shall have had a fair trial.

Mr. DOLPH. The majority reported in favor of the plan of local courts, but that was changed in the committee of conference. The Senate passed the bill to send the claims to the district and circuit courts, giving them concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senate conferees found themselves in the same situation in the conference committee that they were in the Senate in respect to an agreement. They had to yield, to let go some things, to get a result. While they may have undertaken, as they did, to adhere to the views of the majority as presented in the bill, yet they were unable to do it. However, I do not consider that experience at all important to the discussion at this time. Later on we may have this all before us in shape to satisfactorily discuss. All I desired to say I said at the outset in making the correction in the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator from Nebraska misunderstood me and has corrected a statement which I did not make. I meant to be understood as saying that the Senators from the States which did not present Indian-depredation claims were in favor of having such cases go to the Court of Claims. I think the Senator and I agree now, and the Senator has nothing to correct.

At the risk of trespassing upon the patience of the Senator from Oregon, who introduced a resolution (which would have passed without any objection if he had not proceeded to debate it), I ask to have read a letter from Chief Justice Richardson, dated February 18, 1891. He wrote to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] February 23, 1886, which the Senator from Oregon has this morning put into the RECORD, and I ask now to have read his letter of February 18, 1891, on which I shall say nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

COURT OF CLAIMS, Washington, D. C., February 18, 1891.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 17th instant has been received and laid before the judges, and with their concurrence and by their direction I make this reply.

You are quite correct in saying that "however many cases may be pending in the Court of Claims, the court itself is not overburdened with cases ready for decision; that all cases submitted are decided promptly and that more work can be speedily and satisfactorily done by it if such shall be imposed by legislation."

You ask for such other facts as may be pertinent to the subject.

It is true that on the general docket there are a large number of cases, but many of them are never brought to trial, and others are quickly disposed of when put on the trial list. To illustrate: At one time at the present term the Assistant Attorney-General filed a motion to dismiss 540 cases for want of jurisdiction, no action having been taken thereon by the claimants for more than two years.

Then there are many class cases which follow the decision in one of them. In a recent instance 106 cases were disposed of upon the authority of a single decision.

Occasionally cases of unusual magnitude or importance tried in the latter part of a term are held over for more careful consideration by the judges, as is the custom of all courts. Otherwise all cases on the trial list are disposed of before the court adjourns.

A number of Indian cases have been referred by special acts of Congress and have been or will shortly be determined.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON,
Chief Justice.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, Senator, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, as I could not get the figures he gave during the time he was discussing this question, whether he has any information directly from the Court of Claims as to the number of cases that are ready for decision and not decided.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; I have not. The figures I gave were taken mainly from the report of the Attorney-General and from the reports of the two Assistant Attorneys-General who have charge of the business of the Government in the Court of Claims. They give the number of the cases now on the several dockets, because there are several dockets, each class of cases having a separate docket. They also give the number of cases that were disposed of during the past year, and give the number of cases that come from the several different sources—seven in number—of jurisdiction. But I believe the statement is not made in any of these reports as to the number of cases ready for trial.

The discussion on the resolution has branched off almost exclusively on the Indian depredation business, while the resolution itself has no special reference to the Indian depredation business. It has reference generally to the business of the Court of Claims of all classes. There are now pending, according to the statement of the Assistant Attorneys-General, nearly twenty thousand cases on the docket of that court, and there were but 653 cases passed upon during the last year. Consequently if not a single case were added to the docket, and the court should proceed at the same pace that it has proceeded during the last year, it will take over thirty years to clear the docket.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, if there were not so many "ifs" in it, it might take that long; but when probably one decision will settle 2,000 cases on the docket, it is a very different matter, and that is the reason, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the "supposition" of the Senator is as much open to objection as the "ifs" on my part. I can scarcely imagine how it will come about that a decision of one case can dispose virtually of two or three thousand claims.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I do not understand that any one of the Indian-depredation cases has been made ready for submission to the court yet.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think none except those that come under that class which come by certification from the Departments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that any of those are ready.

Mr. PERKINS. I was advised by the Attorney-General that there were quite a number of cases in the hands of the court that had been agreed upon so far as counsel were concerned and awaiting the action of the court.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that the purpose of this resolution is to direct the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the whole subject and get all the information—find out all about it. I do not profess to have all the information that I ought to have or that the Senate ought to have before presenting a bill, but I do propose to instruct the committee to investigate the subject, to see what ought to be done; get all the facts, and then report some such measure as the committee may think a proper one, and then the Senate can discuss it and act upon it. That is my idea.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not the number of cases pending before the court that is the important inquiry, but it is the character of those cases and how many of them belong to certain classes, a decision in one of which decides all of them. A letter has been read from the chief justice of the Court of Claims stating that the court has promptly disposed of every solitary case that was ready for disposition when it was submitted for its action, and that in a very few instances at the end of the term was any case even taken under advisement. It was only last winter that that letter was written.

Mr. CHANDLER. Last February.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the proper way to treat the Court of Claims and this whole subject would be a resolution directing the Court of Claims to report and let us hear from them. They are the ones who know the status of their business; they are the ones to give it; and why impose upon the Committee of the Judiciary of the Senate an investigation of this character until we have first called upon the Court of Claims for their report?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. If that was done I should have no objection to it. But why do we institute an investigation by a standing committee of the Senate to inquire into the judicial branch of the Government and take it for granted that they are behind with their business, charging them with dereliction of duty, in the face of the report that they send to the Senate—why impose that without giving them a hearing?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will tell the Senator why.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Department of Justice, having charge of the business of the Government in the Court of Claims, has made a statement of record in the annual report, showing the state of business in the Court of Claims. Who, I inquire of the Senator from Missouri, is better authorized, or better qualified to know, understand, and comprehend the state of the business and the condition of cases in the Court of Claims than the men representing the Department of Justice? They say, in substance, that it is absolutely necessary that something should be done to relieve the court and litigants. There is no reflection upon the court in what is being done here. Nobody has reflected upon the court in any way. In everything that has been said the court has been commended and the justices of the court have been commended for their faithful, able, and efficient services.

We all agree that the overburdened docket of the court is not the result of any dereliction of duty upon the part of the court or any of its justices; but when the head of the Department of Justice comes in here and states to the Senate and to the Congress that there are nearly 20,000 cases on the docket of the Court of Claims, and that on an average that court is not able to dispose of more than about 650 a year, and recommends that some measures be taken to increase the aids to the court, the aids to the Department of Justice, and the office of the Attorney-General——

Mr. COCKRELL. I am glad the Senator mentions that.

Mr. MITCHELL. When the head of the Department does all these things, and in view of the facts presented it seems to me some action ought to be taken. I hesitate to introduce any bill for the relief of the Court of Claims because I am not quite sure what kind of a bill ought to be introduced, and hence I have thought it best to proceed in this way.

I thought the Judiciary Committe of this body was the proper committee to investigate the matter and find out the facts, and then, if it is found necessary to do anything, of course we would expect that a report of that character would be submitted. That is what the resolution contemplates, that, if necessary, after an investigation, something should be done, then it will be for the committee to report what in their judgment ought to be done, and when that report comes in we can discuss it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was very glad that the Senator intimated that in the report to which he referred from the Department of Justice, there was some expression in regard to the very laborious duties that the officials of that Department had to perform, and I wanted to propound to him the question as to whether that report was not made more directly for the purpose of increasing the force in the Attorney-General's Office and increasing their salaries than for anything else?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; I do not think it was. I think the report was made in good faith, and we are bound to accept it in good faith. I think it was made for the purpose of getting the necessary machinery and necessary means to transact the business of the Government. Now, if the Senator from Missouri is not willing that the Department of Justice, or any other Department of this Government shall have that, then I have nothing more to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator if there was not in that report a suggestion of an increase of salaries of the Assistant Attorneys-General and an increase of the number to be employed?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know as to the salaries. I have not examined to ascertain whether there is any recommendation in regard to salaries or not. There is a recommendation, I think, perhaps for an increase of one Assistant Attorneys-General, and perhaps an increase of some assistant attorneys, not Assistant Attorneys-General.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, assistant attorneys to assist in the prosecution of these cases.

Mr. MITCHELL. To assist in the prosecution of these cases and a suggestion, which I regard in the shape of a recommendation, that a few agents be appointed for the purpose of aiding the court in preparing the cases for trial.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Just precisely what ought to be done I do not pretend to say and this resolution does not pretend to say, but it seems to me, with the facts we have before us, we ought to inquire into the subject and find out what, if anything, ought to be done, and then do it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not know whether any recommendation has been submitted for an increase of the salaries of the Assistant Attorneys-General having charge of this business, but I do know that there ought to be. An officer charged with the responsibility that the Assistant Attorney-General is who has charge of this most important subject, and a man as able as he is as a lawyer, and as vigorous and energetic as he is always in the performance of every duty, can not certainly perform the duties of the office in question for $2,500 a year. It is an absurdity and an outrage that the salary for an officer having charge of so important a subject should be placed at any such limit.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President ——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think, in view of the inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, the facts ought to be stated in reference to the defense of the Indian depredation cases. These cases were sent at the close of the last session, and almost during the very final hours of the session, to the Court of Claims. It was stated that the gross amount of claims to be adjudicated would probably be about $18,000,000, I think the estimate was. It also appears that in the allowances which had been made by the Secretary of the Interior there had been a reduction of about two-thirds, so that it was deemed certain that the amount of these claims eventually to be paid would not be less than $6,000,000.

The suits which have been brought in the court already amount in nominal claims to $23,000,000. There have been already adjudicated in the Interior Department claims amounting, as allowed, to about $1,300,000. It was urged by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] and others that, instead of sending those cases to the Court of Claims, we should advocate an appropriation to pay them directly and immediately from the Treasury of the United States. Instead of doing that, however, it was insisted that those cases already adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior to the amount of $1,300,000 should also go to the Court of Claims, but it was provided that, unless the Attorney-General decided to move to reopen the cases, the Court of Claims should render judgment for the amount allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, and it was further provided that, if those cases were contested, they should have preference upon the docket of the Court of Claims.

This puts upon the Attorney-General's Office the duty of getting ready to try $20,000,000 of claims, and also the duty of investigating administratively the $1,300,000 of claims; and while the act authorized one Assistant Attorney-General to do this, it made no appropriation even for his salary. These facts being called to the attention of the committee, of which the Senator from Missouri is a member, an appropriation was made of $15,000 for the salary of the Assistant Attorney-General, and for such other assistants as the Attorney-General might see fit to employ in order to make an investigation of these cases.

That is the exact situation, and I want the Senator from Missouri to take notice of it, that we have only put $15,000 into the hands of the Attorney-General to defend the $1,300,000 of claims already adjudicated, which he is bound to make an administrative examination of, and also for the preparation for the defense of the eighteen or twenty or twenty-three million dollars of claims. Therefore, as a member of the Committee on Indian Depredations who has had something to do with the passage of the bill, I notify the Senator and the Committee on Appropriations that it will be necessary, if these claims are to be properly defended, that there shall be given to the Department of Justice a force, with sufficient money behind it, to properly defend the Treasury of the United States. I know that the Senator from Missouri wants that defense to be made, and it occurred to me that, in view of his criticism, I ought to state to the Senate the exact condition of affairs. The situation just before the closing hours of the last Congress was called by me to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who saw that an immediate appropriation was necessary, and the sum of $15,000 only was given.

Now, Mr. President, I am not prepared to speak as to the condition of the Attorney-General's Office with reference to the defense of the $400,000,000 of Bowman-act claims or the five or six or ten million dollars of French spoliation claims. I am prepared, however, to speak with reference to its condition concerning the defense of these claims which were referred to the Court of Claims by the last Congress under a bill which I supposed was in every way satisfactory, when it finally passed, to the Senator from Oregon and the Senators from the other States, but which, before one single case is adjudicated, they come here and tell us was imperfect and unjust legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Iowa wish to speak to this question?

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to make a few observations, but, of course, if the Senator has the floor I will not make them now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa, but I first wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire one question in the line of what he has stated. How many cases are included in that one and a half million dollars allowed by the Interior Department? They are one, separate, distinct class, and I ask how many separate claims are there embraced in that allowance of $1,500,000 by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think four or five hundred; but the Senator will understand that it is the first step in this business that costs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand. I am not talking about the expense, but how many cases are there that are all in one class, and which, when investigated by the Attorney-General, if he determines not to open them, are settled by one decision of the court?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not prepared to answer as to what questions of law and fact have to be passed upon in the first instance by the Attorney-General in the uncontested cases, and in the contested cases by the court. I am not prepared to state precisely what those cases are, but I am prepared to say that there are grave questions of law and of fact, and that it was my purpose, and certainly I believe it was the purpose of the Committee on Indian Depredations, that these cases should be thoroughly sifted in the Attorney-General's Office before judgments were allowed to go against the United States to be sent to the Committee on Appropriations to be met with money from the Treasury. There is a great deal of very important work to be done there, I assure the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Everybody knows that I have been watching the Indian depredation claims ever since I have been in the Senate, and I have got every report which was ever made upon them; but I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Oregon to the fact that by the very terms of that act a large number of these cases, thousands of them I might say, have been adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior, and that Congress steadily refused to make any appropriation to pay such adjudications. That is the reason why the court had to be established. Now and then a claim would be paid by an appropriation in an Indian appropriation bill, but there was no general appropriation for their payment. That shows that here are thousands of cases, all of one class, adjudicated by the Interior Department after its investigation and now the Attorney-General is instructed to examine these cases, and unless he protests against them, they are all decided by an approval of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior. There at one lick, by one decision, are probably four or five thousand cases disposed of, involving say four or five million dollars.

I admit that it is an enormous labor imposed upon the Attorney-General. We all know that. To do that work efficiently and promptly will take a large force and will require considerable appropriations. There is no question about that. Everybody wants the Attorney-General to make a thorough investigation of every one of these claims, so as to see that no fraud is attempted or carried out in any one of them.

It is known that a great many of these claims are probably overestimated and overstated, and therefore, investigation is necessary in each one of them; but I insist that there can be no occasion for an investigation by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate until we have a report from the court. I believe that the court will be able to dispose of these cases as rapidly as the parties are willing to submit to a decision of them. Those who have been familiar with the claims business in Congress, in the Departments, and in the courts, know that there will probably be two hundred or five hundred cases all of one class, all brought in that court or brought before the different Departments, and a decision in one of the cases decides all of them.

We know further that there are hundreds of cases brought before the Court of Claims as experiments. They are filed there, and unless the plaintiffs or claimants in those cases respond reasonably with fees and expenditures, the claims are never prosecuted, and after a lapse——

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not a fact that in all these cases, not only Indian-depredation claims, but in cases that have gone to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act and the French spoliation law, there are questions of fact applicable, peculiar, and different that have to be investigated by the court? The court, I admit, may determine a question of law that will settle the law as to a great many cases; but in all these cases, as I understand, there are questions of fact which must be considered—the facts of the particular case which it is necessary to investigate and examine, and this should be done in order that the interests of the Government may be protected as well as that the interests of the claimants may be looked after.

Mr. COCKRELL. The investigations are not conducted there, as they are in the ordinary trial of cases. It is very seldom they are of that character. A great many of the cases depend alone upon the reports made from the Departments, and very little additional evidence is taken. Under the Bowman act cases are taken to the court which formerly came under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence under the act of July 4, 1864, of which there were 60,000 claims filed before the Quartermaster-General alone in the noninsurrectionary States, and probably fifteen or twenty thousand filed before the Commissary-General and also before the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, and quite a number of these cases—24,000 of them I believe there were in all—were at one time pending before the commissioners of claims, otherwise called the Southern Claims Commission.

Some of those cases were dismissed, some of them were simply not acted upon, but they have all been disposed of by dismissal or otherwise, and quite a number of them are taken to the Court of Claims. Sometimes one decision in one of these cases will practically decide twenty-five, fifty, or one hundred claims, and sometimes two hundred of them. Sometimes they linger there for years. At one time it was stated that several hundred claims were referred by a committee of the House of Representatives, were sent to the court, and then the parties were notified that if they would employ certain attorneys those claims would be prosecuted before the Court of Claims, where they had already been referred. According to statements I have heard made upon this floor, it was doubtful in many cases whether the claimants even knew that their claims had been referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act. A great many of those cases go off the docket because at the end of a certain period of time they have not been prosecuted. One order will be made dismissing all that have not been prosecuted up to that time, as stated by Judge Richardson. Any Senator who has made himself familiar with cases coming from the Court of Claims must have at some time seen a hundred cases dismissed under one order of the court for want of prosecution.

We do not know whether the court is behind or not in its business, and I say the legitimate way to proceed in this matter would be by a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Court of Claims, requesting them to furnish the information, and then, if there is any trouble about the question, the Judiciary Committee can take it and pass upon it.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to criticise the report of the Attorney-General. That was made in the interest of the business of his office. It stated the quantity of business; it stated how long it would take the office to dispose of the cases; that if the Court of Claims only decided so many a year, then it would take so many years to dispose of them; but he did not say the Court of Claims could only dispose of this number of cases.

The Court of Claims can dispose of these cases more rapidly than the Attorney-General's Office can have them prepared with the force and the appropriation which has already been made; and, unless the appropriations are increased and the number of attorneys employed in that office and the expenditure for the investigation of these cases increased by a proper appropriation, the Court of Claims will always be able to keep up with the cases as fast as they are submitted for final action.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this debate has disclosed that some additional arrangement perhaps should be made by legislation or otherwise, and now that the Senate is in full possession of the facts, I move the reference of the resolution of the Senator from Oregon to the Judiciary Committee. They can investigate the question thoroughly and see whether the inquiry should be made of the Court of Claims or of the Attorney-General.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered by the Senate. The bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which has been read once, will, without objection, be considered read the second time, and referred to the same committee.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to call up a bill on the Calendar for consideration, being Senate bill 70, Order of Business 20.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest to the Senator that if we go to the Calendar we can dispose of all the cases not objected to in the course of an hour.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. That depends upon one condition. I shall be compelled to object to these cases under the rule unless the reports are here. I have been inquiring, and have been informed, that the reports have not been received from the Public Printer. The reports in some of the cases are very important, and if they have not been received I do not think it fair to consider the bills to which they relate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the reports are all before the Senate, with one or two exceptions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not been able to get them. I should like to know why the pages can not get them as quickly as the Secretary of the Senate can.

Mr. McPHERSON. Until the reports are received I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object to the consideration of the bill I wish taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 70) to increase the limit of cost of the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

Mr. DOLPH. That is one of the public-building bills. We all have bills of that character.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will permit a single statement I think he will not object to the consideration and the passage of the bill.

The Government has a building erected one story high, upon which it is proposed to place a roof for want of sufficient appropriation to complete it. It would be discreditable, as I think, to the Government and a disgrace to the city where it is located. We have asked for a small appropriation of money in order to raise the building up to the height of the surrounding buildings. The Senate will deal with this matter as it thinks best, but whatever may be its action now, the action of to-day upon this bill will serve a wise purpose in future legislation upon this subject.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not object to the bill, but I desire to say that there are quite a number of public-building bills on the Calendar now. I think they are all of them bills that were acted on at the last session of Congress, and I shall have to object hereafter to a motion to take up one of them out of its order. We are all equally interested in such bills, and there is no reason why one should get ahead of the other on the Calendar of the Senate. I do not object to this, but I give notice that hereafter I shall ask to have bills taken up in their order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Secretary has copies of the reports; I have not been able to get them from the document room, and I protest against the Senate proceeding to the consideration of business when it is impossible for Senators to get the reports and examine them. It is not fair, or just, or right. I will call for the reading of every solitary one of the reports, and if they are not here I shall object to proceeding to the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will give me a chance to say one word that I have not had an opportunity to say.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose. I wish to say that my purpose in making the motion was to afford Senators who desire to read the reports an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DOLPH. There are very few reports or bills on the Calendar. I think all the reports accompanying bills on the Calendar are very short and can be easily examined. If the Secretary of the Senate can obtain copies of reports certainly Senators can by sending for them.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are not in the document room and Senators can not get them.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to enter my protest against what the Senate has been doing since we came together. We have been adjourning weekly at least on Thursday over until Monday. We have been adjourning daily almost immediately after the order of the morning business has been gone through with. We have now two or three pages upon the Calendar of bills which have been considered by the Senate heretofore and acted upon and are now ready to be considered. In very few of them are there reports. It is now proposed, at a quarter to 3 o'clock, to adjourn to-day, after nearly the entire session of to-day so far has been used in discussing a resolution simply directing a committee to make an inquiry as to whether certain legislation is needed. Yesterday we adjourned still earlier.

We are rapidly approaching the same condition that we have been in heretofore. The Calendar will keep increasing in length every day and Senators will begin to do as they are doing to-day, ask the Senate to take up bills out of their order on the Calendar so that they may be considered. Pretty soon there will be important public measures before the Senate that will require discussion and will take time, and these bills now on the Calendar will be crowded out for that purpose. When the heat of summer comes, the time when we ought to be able to get away from the national capital and get to the mountains or the seaside for a little recreation and rest, we shall be compelled to meet here at 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning and remain until 6 o'clock, and perhaps hold evening sessions, in order to transact the important business before the Senate.

I wish now to enter my protest, before the motion of adjournment is put, against an early adjournment every day, and to state my desire to see the Senate remain in session to dispose of the business which has been passed upon by committees and is before the Senate and upon the Calendar, in order that the Calendar may be kept clear.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand the bill I called up is before the Senate and that the motion to adjourn has been withdrawn. I therefore ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to withdraw the motion temporarily to enable the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to make his remarks.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The bill referred to by the Senator from New Jersey is before the Senate.

The bill (S. 70) to increase the limit of cost of the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 5, to fill the blank before the word "thousands" by the insertion of "one hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost of site and for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $100,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost of site and for the erection of said building.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move an amendment to the committee's amendment by the addition of the words "and ten," so as to make the amount $110,000. As I am informed, all of that sum will be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the words "one hundred," it is proposed to insert the words "and ten," so as to make the amount $110,000.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have some explanation in regard to the amendment to the amendment. After the committee has passed upon the matter and reported the bill and fixed the amount to which the appropriation should be increased, certainly the Senate ought not, simply upon the motion of a Senator interested, to increase it without hearing something from the committee or having some explanation in regard to it.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will state to the Senator from Oregon that I will make the explanation so far as I have the ability to do it.

I mentioned the matter to the committee, and in the representation that I made a few mornings ago before the committee that $100,000 would be sufficient to complete the building, I find that I was mistaken in the amount, and that about $10,000 additional will be required. I understand that I have the approval of the committee to move this amendment, so far as I have been able to see the members of the committee, and as the representation upon which the committee acted was made entirely by myself, I wish the Senate to understand exactly that if any blame attaches to anyone it is not chargeable upon the committee, but alone to myself.

Unless the appropriation is increased the Government can not do otherwise than put a roof upon a building one story high. Within a few rods of that building there are located five or six steamship lines, whose vessels land at that point. There are a great number of inspectors of customs who have no offices anywhere in the city of Hoboken. It is an internal revenue collection district, and a deputy collector is located there, who keeps his office in his own house mainly. It is also a customs collection district, and the Government needs two or three stories upon this building to accommodate the Government offices. The citizens have asked the contractor to suspend work, and have paid the contractor, I am informed, for so doing, in order that they may have an opportunity to ask the Congress of the United States to make a sufficient appropriation of money, the appropriation now being entirely inadequate, to finish it creditably.

Mr. DOLPH. What was the original appropriation?

Mr. McPHERSON. The first appropriation I think was $75,000, but it was necessary to pay something like $35,000 or $40,000 for a site. That is all I need say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask whether there is any report from any officer of the Government that additional Government room is necessary there, whether there is anything to show on the part of the authorities and representatives of the Government that this building, as it was contemplated by the original appropriation, is not amply sufficient for the transaction of the Government business?

Is the Senate to rely upon and be governed by the wishes of the business men of the town, who want money expended in their midst and who hire a contractor to stop work under the direction of the Government, in the matter of the erection of a public building? Are we not to consult some of the officers of the Government in this matter? When these numerous bills for public buildings come up, is it to be the privilege of each Senator in whose State they happen to be to get up and move an amendment to increase the amount appropriated by the committee just as it may suit his pleasure? There are serious questions involved.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will answer the Senator from Missouri by stating that the mayor of the city of Hoboken and a large number of the citizens of that city came before the Treasury Department and pointed out the fact that the Government was there erecting a public building but one story high, surrounded on all sides by magnificent structures used for commercial purposes; that they thought it was not only a disgrace to the Government but also to their city that the Government of the United States, needing the room for other purposes, should erect such a structure in so important and growing a city, and the percentage of the increase of population during the past ten years in the city of Hoboken has been quite equal to that of the most growing city in the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the present population?

Mr. McPHERSON. The population is now nearly 50,000.

This representation was made to the Treasury Department, and they were informed that the Department could not suspend the work of the contractor; that he must proceed and put on the roof. They then agreed that they would have the work suspended by the contractor in order that they might lay their claim before the Congress of the country for relief.

In the first place, the State of New Jersey to-day, one of the thirteen original States, has less money invested upon her territory in Government buildings than has been appropriated for a single city not yet twenty years old in a Western State.

I find it is the easiest matter in the world to get an appropriation of three or four or five hundred thousand dollars to build a post-office in a remote western city, when the cost of that building exceeds the cost of all the public buildings erected by the United States upon the soil of New Jersey from the beginning of this Government down to the present hour. If this thing is to go on, if the Government of the United States may come into the State of New Jersey, in one of its most important and growing cities, and put up a building only one story high to accommodate 50,000 people who get their mail in that office, then I shall inquire most diligently with respect to every public building erected hereafter by this Government in any locality.

Mr. COCKRELL. That you ought to do any way.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Government approved the site selected and purchased it, and it took more than half of the appropriation of money it made to purchase the site, and in fact there was no other available site that could be found. The report of the committee was for $100,000. It was upon my statement, the very lowest possible sum (and I supposed I was correct in making that statement) that the building could be completed for, and the committee generously accepted my statement. I now ask to have the bill amended slightly by the addition of $10,000. If objection is made to that and it is proposed to strike it out, I will withdraw the amendment, and we shall go as far as we can with the additional appropriation, making $100,000 towards completing the building.

It is no uncommon thing in New Jersey for the people of that State, unable to obtain sufficient appropriations of money for a public building, to put their hands into their own pockets and help the Government out, and I want to assure Senators in this case it will be done.

I want to give due notice of another thing, and that is, if another public building bill is attempted to be passed in the Senate carrying such extravagant appropriations as we have been in the habit of granting it will be passed at the last hours of the session of the Senate and not before. Let it be understood hereafter that all cities of 50,000 people whose growth in ten years equals 50 per cent of increase of population shall not receive a building fund of more than $100,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that he is going to oppose any other bill for the erection of public buildings?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all. I say that New Jersey is entitled to a fair division of the appropriations which are made for public buildings; but if the Government of the United States is so poverty stricken, so poor that it can not, after beginning a public building in the city of Hoboken and carrying it up one story, finish it, it is too poor to give three, four, five, or six hundred thousand dollars towards erecting public buildings elsewhere. In short, if the Government is too poor to finish a building already begun, it should not attempt new enterprises, and especially very costly ones.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why, Mr. President, that is the most ridiculous proposition that was ever made on the floor of the Senate, to come in here and claim that the State of New Jersey, because she was one of the original thirteen States, must have just as much public money expended for public buildings in her territory as is expended in any other State. There is no foundation of justice or equity or fair dealing in any such proposition as that. New Jersey is entitled to be treated just as every other State in the Union is treated, and nobody upon this Senate floor will withhold from the State of New Jersey one solitary thing to which she is entitled. If you are entitled to this we want you to have it, but we want to have some reason for it.

Now, let us look at this case for just a moment. The Senator from New Jersey has been here a long time. He was here when the bill passed providing for the construction of this building. Why was not the fight then made for whatever amount was deemed necessary? He knew what kind of a public building would be constructed out of the amount appropriated. The bill went through all right; the construction of the building was commenced, and then the good people of that city perhaps very properly think that the building being erected is not magnificent enough to suit the proportions of their town and its growing importance, and that it would be shameful to have a one-story building erected there. That may be all perfectly right.

The Senator then goes before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and they give him just what he asks. Since they have made their report, on the 11th instant, the day before yesterday, he comes in and asks the Senate to add $10,000 more to what the committee has recommended. Where is to be the end of this matter? I want the Senator distinctly to see the position in which he is placing the Senate in voting anything that any Senator may ask. I have no objection to this appropriation if it is necessary, but the Senate should know why we make these extensions, and know why it is that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having heard the Senator himself, having heard the parties in this matter, and having deliberately reported to us that a certain amount is necessary, should be overruled and the amount increased. I think the country is entitled to know that, and that it is no reflection on the grand old State of New Jersey or her distinguished representative to make inquiries of him and to have the facts spread upon the record, that our action may be justified before the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am not willing that the Senator from Missouri shall place his own construction on my words and let the matter go to the Senate or to the country in the way that he has stated it. I will not repeat myself over and over again for the sake of correcting the Senator from Missouri.

I have made the statement in the first place that the appropriation of money was insufficient, and therefore we came back and asked for an additional appropriation. I have stated the simple fact that the State of New Jersey, one of the thirteen original States, had to-day less money of this Government appropriated for public buildings than had been appropriated to building a post-office in a single city in the West in a new State, when the city was less than twenty-five years old.

When we ask for a meager appropriation of money to complete a building already begun and up one story, in which the Government contractor is now required in furtherance of his contract to proceed and put on the roof, a one-story post-office which the Government is not willing to complete and build it up to make it compare with surrounding buildings, and that appropriation of money is proposed to be withheld by the Senator from Missouri, and I dare say in the immediate future we shall see his vote recorded in favor of many magnificent projects elsewhere for the beginning of public buildings from the ground up in some other State, but he thinks that the Government of the United States can not afford to contribute enough from its Treasury to complete a building already begun.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator is exceedingly unfortunate in saying that I have attempted to withhold that appropriation. I ask him for a decent explanation, and the Senator gets mad about it and says that I am trying to withhold his honest and just appropriation. I am perfectly astonished at him. I have not made a particle of objection, but I want to know why it is that a committee of the Senate, before which the Senator himself appeared and asked for $100,000, is to be overridden and $10,000 more added to the appropriation. I wanted a reason for it, because here are twenty, thirty, or forty bills coming right up from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and are the amounts they have recommended to be increased every time a Senator gets up on this floor and states that it is necessary? That is the question before the Senate. If the additional sum is necessary, it should be allowed, but when a Senator is asked to show why he wants to override a committee of the Senate, where an increase has already been made at his suggestion, he should be ready to state his reasons for such a course.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is that all of the Senator's objection? If I had known that was all the objection the Senator had I should have withdrawn the amendment an hour ago. I thought from the Senator's speech that he was objecting to the appropriation itself, but it seems he is objecting only because I am overriding the committee by asking for $10,000 additional. I again say if that is the only objection of the Senator from Missouri I withdraw my amendment very gladly. We can make the necessary building in the city of Hoboken. If it requires $10,000 more we can easily raise that amount of money without asking it from the Government, with the understanding, however, made known to all the world, that the Government is unable or unwilling to erect a suitable post-office building in Hoboken.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was making no objection in any shape, manner, or form, and have made none. I have simply asked an explanation. If this $10,000 is necessary it should be appropriated, but if it is not necessary it should not be appropriated merely because a Senator asks for it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I interfere with very great reluctance in this interesting controversy between my colleague and the Senator from New Jersey. It is the only ripple upon the stagnant waters of parliamentary life that we have had during this session. I may realize the fate of the mediator generally—before the controversy is ended he is attacked by both parties—but I want to say in defense of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member, and in the absence of the chairman, that this matter is not worthy of any excitement or any heated discussion at all.

As the Senator from New Jersey has stated, our committee, after referring the matter to the Superintendent of the Architect's Bureau in the Treasury Department, reported the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey, which appropriated $125,000 for this building. It went to the House of Representatives and was there pared down to $75,000, which was an inadequate appropriation according to the estimate of the Architect, but as a matter of course the Senators from New Jersey accepted the amendment, as they were compelled to do at that stage of the session, and the bill was passed.

At the meeting of the committee on Friday last (if I may be permitted to speak of committee proceedings) the Senator from New Jersey appeared and made the statement that he has made to-day upon this floor, that the building is in an unfortunate condition, and the plainest dictates of business management and of strict economy require an additional appropriation in order to make the building available at all for the purposes originally intended. We then reported the bill appropriating $100,000, which was all he asked.

Yesterday the Senator from New Jersey came to me, as a member of the committee, and stated that he had been mistaken as to the amount, and it required $10,000 more. I am not prepared to say that this matter of the increased appropriation was referred to the Bureau of the Architect, for the reason that it would have been discourteous, unnecessary, and improper for us to have doubted the personal statement of the Senator from New Jersey, which he has repeated here to-day. The bill which we originally passed went, as all other bills do that come to our committee, to that Bureau, and I will say to my colleague now that he is entirely right in having stated that that practice should be observed. Every bill that comes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds goes to the Treasury Department for report in regard to the necessity for the building and in regard to the dimensions of the building. In this case the difficulty has arisen from the fact that $35,000 was taken out of $75,000 to pay for the ground, and that, as a matter of course, left a deficiency.

I deprecate very much the line of discussion adopted by my friend from New Jersey, who has no right to complain of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or the Senate. We have given him all that he has ever asked, and we were very glad to do so. We have the greatest respect for him and the greatest desire to meet the wishes of his people when we consider that they are well founded. But it was unnecessary to draw any parallel between appropriations for the State of New Jersey and any other State. The Senator is fortunate in representing a State which is almost finished, and well finished. It has its public buildings, while the West is new, just beginning the career which I hope, as to each State, will be as illustrious and honorable in the annals of the Government as has been that of the State of New Jersey. We need public buildings because our States are beginning to grow, and to grow with such phenomenal rapidity that legislation is not able to keep up with the vast increase of population.

But the Senator must know that it is in no spirit of discrimination and with no sectional feelings that this matter should be approached. Once or twice in my career here in this body the question has been brought here, and always with bad results, in regard to the amount of appropriations for different States. For one I have always favored liberal appropriations for public buildings, and I shall always do so. I believe it is money always well expended, often extravagantly, but better expended in some shape than not at all. It is distributed among the people; it places in towns and cities of the United States before our people the insignia of our nationality and of our country's greatness. There are many appropriations that can not be defended, Mr. President, but those for public buildings are more defensible, as a class, than any others that pass through the hands of Congress.

This appropriation is a just one. I hope that my friend will not withdraw his amendment, and I shall most cheerfully upon his statement vote for the appropriation of $110,000 in order to complete this public edifice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from New Jersey withdraws his amendment to the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHESTER B. SWEET.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 636) for the relief of Chester B. Sweet, of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Chester B. Sweet, of California, $108.66, being the amount of the double minimum excess erroneously paid by him to the receiver of the land office as double minimum excess on preëmption cash certificate No. 1298, Shasta, Cal., for lots 1, 2, and 3, and northeast quarter of southwest quarter of section No. 7, in township No. 40 north, range No. 7 west, Mount Diablo base and meridian, made at Shasta, Cal., March 17, 1886.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report of the committee, commencing "On May 21, 1885," in the letter dated January 13, 1890, from the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, be read.

Mr. DOLPH. Going down to the end of the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that is all that it is necessary to read. I have not had time to read the report, but that is the only material part of it.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. DOLPH from the Committee on Public Lands, January 11, 1892, as follows:

On May 21, 1885, Chester B. Sweet filed declaratory statement No. 247 for lot 1, E. ½ of NW. ¼ and NE. ¼ of SW. ¼, sec. 7, T. 40 N., R. 7 W., alleging settlement December 25, 1859. The filing we afterwards amended to lots 1, 2, and 3, and NE. ¼ of SW. ¼, sec. 7, T. 40 N., R. 7 W., containing 158.93 acres. He made final proof and payment per cash certificate No. 1298.

The plat of the township was filed in the local land office June 27, 1881. This land is within the 20-mile limits of the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, whose right attached thereto August 3, 1871. As Sweet made settlement on the land prior to the attachment of the right of the railroad company he was entitled to enter the land at the minimum price.

At or about the time the proofs of Sweet were received at the land office, there was delivered to the receiver by express from H. B. Gillis, without notice, the sum of $400. The receiver, supposing that the money was from Mr. Sweet (and his, Sweet's, land being within the granted limits of the Central Pacific grant), without due consideration, applied said $400 upon the entry at the rate of $2.50 per acre, issuing a receipt for $397.33, and sending Sweet a duplicate receipt and also $2.67, being the balance over and above $2.50 per acre for 158.93 acres.

The receiver stated that the error was not discovered until one J. F. Matthews, having furnished the additional proof required by office letter G, of August 26, 1886, and the receiver calling upon Mr. Gillis, who is also Matthews's attorney, for the money to pay for the land, was informed by Mr. Gillis that the money sent some time previous was to pay for the land of both Sweet and Matthews. The receiver then found that he had inadvertently applied all the money to the payment of Sweet's entry. So, by this misapprehension, the receiver had erroneously charged the entryman $1.25 per acre in excess of the minimum price.

As this case does not come within the provisions of the laws authorizing repayment of purchase money, I would, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill.

Senate bill No. 1439 is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

W. M. STONE,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announces the resignation of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] as chairman of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] be appointed chairman of the Committee on Coast Defenses, which was made vacant by the resignation of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] be appointed chairman of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, in place of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], resigned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion will also be considered as agreed to, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 800) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas certain lands therein was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant to the State of Kansas the right to occupy, improve, and control for the purposes of a soldier's home, to be established and maintained thereon by the State, two and one-half sections of the lands embraced within the Fort Hays military reservation, to include the buildings located thereon, and to be selected by the governor of the State of Kansas according to legal subdivisions and contiguous, on condition that the State shall, within two years, establish such home at which provision shall be made for the care and maintenance of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, their dependent parents, widows, or orphans, and under such rules and regulations as the State may provide.

There is likewise granted to the State from this reservation, to be selected by the governor, two and one-half sections of land, to embrace the timber on the reservation, such selections to be made to correspond to the legal subdivisions and to adjoin the first-named tract. The last-named tract is granted for the purpose and upon condition that the State of Kansas shall make of the same and maintain thereon a public park, and shall fully protect from destruction and damage the timber. But the United States reserves to itself the fee and the right forever to resume possession and dispose of the lands whenever it shall appear that the State of Kansas has ceased to use the same for public purposes.

Section 2 provides that all the remainder of the reservation, after these selections have been made, shall be opened to settlement under the homestead laws only; but no entry shall embrace more than 80 acres.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], who reported the bill, explain whether this reservation is one known as an abandoned military reservation. I have not the list before me.

Mr. DOLPH. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is one which has been turned over to the Interior Department?

Mr. DOLPH. It has been turned over to the Interior Department, and the only question is for Congress to dispose of it.

This bill was introduced by our late colleague from Kansas, Mr. Plumb, in the last Congress. It was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Public Lands and was reported and passed by the Senate, but it failed to pass the House of Representatives. This is an exact copy of the bill passed by the Senate. It proposes to make a donation of this reservation to the State on condition that the State shall maintain upon it a home for soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their widows and orphans, and also proposes to grant to the State two and a half sections of land which is timbered, for the purpose of maintaining a park, reserving the fee to the United States, with the right at any time to resume possession and dispose of the lands if the State of Kansas shall cease to use them for the public purposes herein indicated. The rest of the land, the Senator will see, is to be disposed of under the homestead laws only, and then only 80 acres in one claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the general law now in regard to those reservations? I thought Congress had passed a general law subsequent to the one that transferred them all.

Mr. DOLPH. No, we have been in the habit of passing special acts to dispose of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was under the impression that there had been some general law declaring that they should be subject only to homestead entry. The first law which made the transfer of the then existing abandoned military reservation ordered the transfer of the subsequent abandoned ones and provided for a sale for cash.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that Congress did pass such a law within a very few years providing that such lands should be surveyed and sold, and that the improvements upon them, which consist of buildings used for military purposes, should also be sold under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the law which transferred them. I reported that bill myself and I know all about it. That was the law which made a transfer of the military reservations to the Interior Department and then provided for a survey by the Interior Department, a sale of the buildings, etc. But has there not been a subsequent law?

Mr. MANDERSON. Let me add that a survey has never been made of the lands by reason of the lack of appropriations.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator has his impression, I think, from what has been the rule of the Committee on Public Lands, and it has been accepted by the Senate within the last four or five years, to dispose of these abandoned military reservations under the homestead principle. That has been done as a rule, I think. Quite a number of bills have been passed recognizing the principle of homestead settlement upon these reservations where there is no valuable timber.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it has been the rule to pass such bills, but I thought there had been a general law passed providing that wherever an abandoned reservation had no valuable improvements upon it and was not close to any city, the lands should be open to entry under the homestead law.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think no law has been passed on the subject, but that has been the practice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRATER LAKE PARK IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 625) to grant to the State of Oregon townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, for a public park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether there are any settlers on this land.

Mr. DOLPH. No; there are no settlers on the land. The land is upon the crest of the Cascade Mountain. It includes what is known as Crater Lake, a great natural curiosity, a lake which occupies what was once the crater of a volcano. The park is to be quite large, but the truth is that it ought to be larger. It ought to embrace all the crest of the Cascade Mountain and the Sierra Nevadas from British Columbia to the lower part of California. It is land not valuable for agriculture. It had already been withdrawn from settlement and sale by an order of the President before we passed the act at the last Congress which authorized timber reservations. The State is required to take care of the timber and protect it from fire and depredations, and Congress reserves the right at any time to declare that the State is not performing the condition of the trust and to take the property and dispose of it.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly; I should be glad to answer it, if I can.

Mr. FRYE. There is a provision, I noticed in the bill as it was being read, that the money received from leases, etc., might be appropriated to the repairing and building of roads leading to the park.

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. How far might that be expended on roads in Oregon?

Mr. DOLPH. It could only be expended on roads that are necessary to cross the reservation, I suppose, or to reach it. The Senator will understand that the park itself is upon the crest of the Cascade Mountain, upon the highest portion of the range through Oregon, and it is heavily timbered.

The expense of making roads to reach it will be quite large. As I said, it is already a timber reservation; it has already been reserved from sale, and if I find that the order of the President reserving it under the recent act to repeal the timber-culture act and for other purposes will give any greater security to the timber or prevent encroachments upon it better, I shall ask that that order be made applicable to it.

The only object of this bill is, if the State of Oregon will undertake the opening of a public park and the preservation of the timber, to allow it to do so, with power on the part of Congress at any time to say that it is not complying with the conditions of the trust and to take possession of the property.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator understand that that limits the appropriation of money purely and simply to roads which are built for the purpose of entering the reservation or the park?

Mr. DOLPH. No, I think also roads such as the State would have to build in order to obtain access to the park, to make it valuable and accessible, would be included.

The bill was ordered to be grossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS GUINEAN.

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of Thomas Guinean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Thomas Guinean, of Oregon, the assignee of Bradley S. Hoyt, deceased, of California, $160, paid the United States by Hoyt on account of land entry at Shasta, Cal., which entry was subsequently canceled.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. I will state, in answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Missouri, that this bill was reported twice before and that it was twice passed. It is for the sum of $160 that was paid into the Treasury by Guinean, as the assignee of Hoyt, in entering 640 acres of land under the desert-land act. The entry was afterwards canceled by reason of the fact that the Department found that it was not desert land within the meaning of the law.

Some question arose before the committee as to whether the original entry was fraudulent or not. I examined the case most thoroughly, and went through all the papers of the Department, and I am convinced there was no fraud about it, but that the land was entered in good faith, and at 25 cents per acre, making $160, which was paid into the Treasury. The entry was afterwards canceled, and this is simply to give back to the man his $160 that the Government received for land which the man did not get by reason of its not being desert land.

There is a general statute about paying back money where it is erroneously paid into the Treasury, but the Department hold that that statute does not cover this case. They refuse to refund the money without a special act of Congress, by reason of the fact that it was paid in, the party knowing for what he paid it; but it was simply held not to be desert land within the meaning of the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the general desert-land law there is a forfeiture if there is fraud?

Mr. BERRY. If there has been fraud it would have been forfeited; but the committee carefully investigated it, and I am satisfied there was no fraud, and that the man is entitled to his money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The bill (S. 386) to provide for the disposal of Fort Hartsuff, Fort Sheridan, and Fort McPherson military reservations, in the State of Nebraska, to actual settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the proviso of the bill, which is as follows:

Provided, That any person who, prior to the passage of this act, may have become an actual resident upon any of said reservations and may have erected permanent improvements thereon, may, if living, enter one quarter section of said land, to include his residence and improvements, under the provisions of the homestead laws, notwithstanding he may have previously exhausted his rights thereunder, and notwithstanding the inhibition in section 2298 of the Revised Statutes; or, if deceased, his heirs may enter such quarter section and may perfect title thereto in like manner as if the land had been entered by the deceased settler during his lifetime.

As I understand the law which transfers these abandoned military reservations to the Secretary of the Interior, it gives no preference to anyone who might go in there and jump upon the land. Now, does not this give a priority to persons who, before these lands had been declared open to settlement, to settlers and other classes who were hanging around there, to go and jump down upon the land and make a little improvement, and now come in when they could not obtain it under the general law and get a priority of right? It looks to me as if it is worse than the "sooner" matter down in the Indian Territory.

Mr. PADDOCK. These reservations are in the far western section of our State, in what is known as the semihumid district. The truth of it is that much of the land is comparatively worthless. A few poor people who had exhausted their rights under the homestead law have gone upon those lands, maybe a dozen or twenty—perhaps more; there are very few, at all events; I do not know the exact number. If they have had the courage and enterprise to go there and try to make something out of that land, the object and purpose of the bill is simply to give them a right to take their quarter section, with their improvements, such as they may be—simply to give them priority of right as to that.

The inhibition to which the Senator calls attention is the inhibition which precludes anyone from taking more than 160 acres of land under the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the bill propose to give preference to men who go upon these military reservations in direct violation of law when they have no right to go there? They force themselves upon the land and are given a preference for wrongdoing.

Mr. PADDOCK. The settler simply has gone there as a squatter, and all people, in the earlier days, before the later legislation in reference to the settlement of the public lands, under the preemption law notably, were permitted to go anywhere and squat upon the public lands, and they became what were called squatters, with the priority of right to purchase their land afterwards.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; but this was not public land.

Mr. PADDOCK. All there is of it is that these poor people have gone upon one or two of these reservations and have built little houses and have improved and cultivated 160 acres of land each upon the reservation, the title of which could only be secured through the general law, as it stands now, at public sale and purchase. The homestead laws obtain all around these reservations, and settlers are upon the lands; that is, where they are at all available. This is in rather a poor section of the country, and the settlements are as yet quite thin. Certainly, since the repeal of the preëmption and timber-culture laws, it would not be a fair rule to exclude such lands as these from settlement under the homestead law. Particularly is this apparent when it is remembered that many such acts as this had been passed before the repeal of those laws.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about the right of any one to go upon public land, whether surveyed or unsurveyed. There is no question but that Congress has always given such settler the priority of right. But why did not Congress give them priority of right in the Indian Territory? Because they might slip in there and jump upon the land before the hour designated in the President's proclamation. Here are military reservations. They had no right under the law to go upon these reservations or squat or settle there under any circumstances until the lands were declared in the manner provided by law open to such settlement, and now it is proposed to give them priority of right. There is the injustice of the measure.

Mr. PADDOCK. Lawfully they had no right to go, but they are there. The lands are not worth anything to speak of at all to anybody in the world except to these men. There is no contest about them between any people in the world, either on the reservations or outside of the reservations.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let me suggest to my colleague that these lands became public lands when they were abandoned as military reservations, and some are surveyed, but most of them are unsurveyed. When they were abandoned by the War Department by operation of law they went to the Secretary of the Interior as public lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. But not to be opened to settlement until they had been surveyed by the Department and ready for disposal as public lands.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course they were not. The vast body of lands in the West, while open to settlement in this way by squatters, but not by law, were not surveyed. When these military reservations were abandoned by order of the War Department they were put under the Interior Department as public lands, just as all the broad domain of the West became public lands, not open to legal settlement until surveyed, but always open to actual settlers, who were protected in their settlement.

Mr. PADDOCK. Except as to the disposition of the same under the act of 1882, I think a disposition of them was to be made by public sale or some such competitive method of disposition, and the lands were liable to purchase.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Nebraska is mistaken when he says that the lands became open to settlement by operation of the law transferring them to the Interior Department.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not make that statement. The Senator misunderstands me.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were public lands.

Mr. MANDERSON. I said they were public lands, and virtually open to settlement, just like any other unsurveyed public lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. Here is the difference. They had been made military reservations. They were, therefore, not open to the settlement of anybody, and the lands which had always been public lands were always open to the settlement of anybody, surveyed or unsurveyed. There is a vast difference.

There is an important principle involved in this measure. There is a case from California that was pending before the committee some years ago in which persons claimed a priority of right in an exceedingly valuable military reservation because they had gone there and squatted upon it in defiance of military authority. Some of these reservations are very valuable; and if a man can go there in defiance of the public authority, or if some person indirectly connected with some officer of the Government is permitted to go in and squat upon these valuable lands, he may gain rights which it is not proper he should have. That is the point we want to guard.

Now, I want to ask the Senator where these military reservations are. It would be a gross outrage and fraud upon the public to allow these persons to obtain priority of right upon these reservations, which have become very valuable, and some of them very close to cities and towns. Where is Fort Hartsuff?

Mr. PADDOCK. It does not seem to me to be necessary to repeat what I have stated upon honor here, that these reservations are in the farther limits of our State, in what is known as the semihumid or arid section. The lands are as nearly valueless as any lands that can be found anywhere. The people to whom the Senator refers, who may have this priority of right, are very poor squatters, who have failed elsewhere, by loss perhaps of their claims through contest and one thing or another, and they have gone here as a last resort and made a little home of 160 acres of sandy plain.

This bill was passed at the last session of Congress, and similar bills relating to one or two other reservations were passed at sessions before, considered by the Committee on Public Lands, when my distinguished friend was a member of that committee, and reported with his assent. They were drawn on all fours with this bill. They have all been alike; there is no difference between any of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator explain to me where are these reservations? Are they in the extreme western part of your State?

Mr. PADDOCK. They are in the very western part of the State.

Mr. COCKRELL. All of them—Fort Sheridan?

Mr. PADDOCK. All of them; three of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are they near any considerable town or village or city?

Mr. PADDOCK. Not at all. There is nothing of any value there. They are remote from any town whatever. They were not permanent reservations; they were merely little tracts of land that were cut out through the necessities of the situation in the latter years of the war.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are there any valuable or permanent improvements made by the Government?

Mr. PADDOCK. Not at all; if anything, they are merely adobe buildings.

Mr. COCKRELL. That changes the situation.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I simply wish to have the record show that my colleague in the bill reported by him is asking no favoritism for the State that we have the honor to represent. We are following in the line of precedent not only in the several special acts that have been passed as to particular reservations, but in the general law.

In such brief time as has been afforded me I have looked up several of the statutes, and I find that they all recognize the rights of these squatters, if you call them that—men who went upon the reservations while they were military reservations in many instances, but most of them after they were abandoned and before survey. I turn, for instance, to the law that provided for restoring to the public domain the military reservation known as the Fort Ripley reservation, in the State of Minnesota, and I find that in that case "the rights of all actual settlers entitled to the benefits of the preëmption or homestead laws who now occupy said lands shall date from the date of their actual settlement thereon," going back to the time when they made what was simply a squatter's entry. I find in the general law that was, I believe, reported by the Senator from Missouri the following provision:

Provided, That any settler who is in actual occupation of any portion of such reservation prior to the location of such reservation or settled thereon——

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; prior to the time it became a reservation.

Mr. MANDERSON. Exactly; but it fixes——

Mr. COCKRELL. This is done after it became a reservation, and in defiance of law.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am reading the law:

Or settled thereon prior to January 1, 1884, in good faith, for the purpose of securing a home and reëntering the same under the general laws.

That date fixes a settlement after its abandonment as a military reservation but before its restoration to the public domain by survey and by permit to enter and make homestead entry. So this measure is in line with all legislation, and especially with the general precedent as found in the general law governing abandoned reservations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not going to object to this bill, but I want to correct the Senator from Nebraska and say that my statement is absolutely and mathematically correct. I say that no person has ever been given priority by this Government, unless it was in very extraordinary and exceptional cases, who went and settled upon lands reserved for the use of the Government when they were not open to settlement, but in all cases the squatters, so called, upon the public domain, whether that domain was surveyed or unsurveyed, have always been given a priority. That has been the universal law and rule in this Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the bill (S. 51) to provide for the free coinage of gold and silver bullion, and for other purposes, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 14, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate, January 13, 1892.

CONSUL.

William O. Thomas, of Johnson City, Tenn., to be consul of the United States at Bahia.

SURGEON MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

John B. Hamilton, of Illinois, to be surgeon in the Marine Hospital Service of the United States.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Arthur Carter, of Maryland, to be collector of customs for the district of Annapolis, in the State of Maryland.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITH of Illinois, for the remainder of this week, on account of business.

To Mr. CRAIN, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr BUCHANAN of New Jersey, for one day.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask leave of absence for my colleague Mr. WARNER until Monday next, on account of important business.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. WIKE. I ask leave of absence for my colleague Mr. FITHIAN for ten days longer.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. WISE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House either as a full or subcommittee, to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths in pursuing inquiries touching any matter of proposed legislation referred to it, and shall also be authorized to have printed and bound for its use any papers or documents relating to the subject referred to or being investigated by said committee during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. PAYNE. I think it ought to go to a committee. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair is correctly informed, this is a resolution in the usual form allowing the committee leave to print papers, documents, etc.

Mr. BURROWS. It is something more than that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I insist on the objection. I object to the present consideration of the resolution. I think it ought to go to a committee.

Mr. WISE. I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that we are asking no other privilege than that granted to the same committee in former Congresses, and that granted to other committees in the present Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. This is a pretty broad resolution. I think it ought to be considered by a committee. Therefore I insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order to introduce the resolution, but will of course entertain first the question of reference, as it is the privilege of the House to dispose of the resolution in that way if it desires. Does the gentleman from New York move to refer the resolution?

Mr. PAYNE. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To what committee?

Mr. PAYNE. To the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 50, noes 122.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I think the House does not fully comprehend the purport of this resolution. No such authority was ever conferred upon any committee within my recollection during the time I have been a member of this House.

A MEMBER. Not on this committee, at any rate.

Mr. BYNUM. The resolution proposes to confer upon the Committee on Commerce authority to send for persons and papers and take evidence upon every bill that may be referred to it. Now, I should not object if the proposition were to give the Committee on Commerce this authority with reference to some particular subject upon which special information might be desired. But to grant to this committee full power to send for persons and papers from all over the country, and to take testimony upon every subject that may be referred to it—even upon every little bridge bill—would involve, it seems to me, a very dangerous power—one that might lead to unlimited extravagance in the expenditures of this House. I submit that this inquiry ought to be restricted to some special subject; authority ought not to be conferred in this unlimited manner.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I would suggest that a similar resolution was adopted the other day with regard to the preparation of bills by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYNUM. That, I think, is usually done, but in regard simply to the preparation of the appropriation bills. Only that and nothing else.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I only cite it as a precedent for this resolution so far as it goes.

Mr. BYNUM. But no resolution has ever been adopted here so broad in its provisions with reference to other committees. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the resolution to which he refers authorized the Committee on Appropriations to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The resolution authorizing the Committee on Appropriations was similar to resolutions heretofore adopted with regard to the business of that committee, but I do not know whether it was identical with the resolution now presented by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BYNUM. I recollect that a resolution was passed conferring power on the Committee on Appropriations, but it related exclusively to the appropriation bills and was confined to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. And related to matters referred to that committee only.

Mr. BYNUM. So I understand.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did the resolution authorize the Committee on Appropriations to send for persons and papers?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. But only with reference to appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. That seems to be an unusual power.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would ask that the resolution be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, in order that the resolution shall conform to the wishes of the gentleman from Indiana and other gentlemen, I am perfectly willing to suggest an amendment striking out that portion of the resolution relating to authority on the part of the committee to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia accepts the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, and the Clerk will report the words proposed to be stricken out of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words: "to send for persons and papers and administer oaths in pursuing inquiries touching any matters of proposed legislation referred to it."

The amendment was adopted.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. WISE, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the large amount of work before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, I am directed by that committee to ask the House for its permission to sit during the sessions of the House, and I ask unanimous consent to proffer that request now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to forward to the House a tabular statement of all goods shipped to Porto Rico and the Dominican Republic since the reciprocity treaties went into effect with said countries; also, a statement showing, if any, the increase or decrease on any merchandise imported into said countries by reason of said reciprocity treaties.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

On motion of Mr. STONE of Kentucky, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I wish also to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to send to the House all communications in relation to the reciprocity treaties with Cuba, Porto Rico, the Dominican Republic, San Salvador, and the United States of Brazil, together with a copy of the respective tariffs of said countries of import and export duties; also, a copy of all concessions granted by the Dominican Republic to American citizens.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

On motion of Mr. STONE of Kentucky, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT HOUSE, BIG OYSTER BED SHOAL, NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that a bill for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey, introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN], was referred through the petition box by error. If there be no objection it will be referred from the desk at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3589) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at or near Big Oyster Bed Shoal, New Jersey, was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE BOARMAN.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BOATNER submitted a resolution directing the investigation of charges against Hon. Aleck Boarman, judge of the United States district court for the western district of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TABULAR INDEX, CONGRESSIONAL ANNALS.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing;

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 2,050 copies of the table showing the contents of the several volumes comprising the annals of Congress—Congressional Debates, Congressional Globe, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Statutes at Large, and United States Supreme Court Reports, arranged by years and Congresses, which was compiled for the Senate Library by Alonzo W. Church, librarian of the Senate, and Henry H. Smith, late Journal Clerk of the House of Representatives; 6 copies to be delivered to each Member and Delegate and the remaining 34 copies to be deposited in the House and Hall library.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 69) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.;

A bill (S. 593) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, at Drayton, N. Dak.;

A bill (S. 747) to repeal section 4145 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to amend sections 4146, 4320, also section 1 of the act amending section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, approved March 3, 1883, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 902) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bradford, Pa.;

A bill (S. 1074) to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Oregon;

A bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast;

A bill (S. 1122) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia; and

A bill (S. 1183) to extend the privileges of transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to the port of Sandusky, Ohio.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGER.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be reported by the Clerk, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been the usual custom to allow the minority an extra messenger, and as the Republican caucus has asked that Mr. Bert W. Kennedy act as such: Therefore,

Be it resolved, that Mr. Bert W. Kennedy be authorized to act as messenger for the House of Representatives from this date; and to receive compensation therefor at the rate of $900 per annum, the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the resolution was not distinctly heard, and I hope it will be reported again.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that subject is before the House I wish to make an inquiry. I believe there is a gentleman already employed on that side of the House who occupies the same relation to the House that a gentleman did on this side during the last Congress. I refer to Mr. Chauncey.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman desire an answer to his question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, there is one such messenger already.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Not a page.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman desire an answer from me?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana I wish to say there were three men kept during the last Congress by the majority.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. For the minority.

Mr. BLOUNT. For the minority, I should have said. One of them was Mr. Isaac Hill, at $1,500; one was Mr. Coakley, at $1,200, and the other was Mr. Betts, at $1,200. This resolution simply provides for one additional person, making two instead of three, the number allowed to the minority in the last Congress, and fixing the salary at $900 instead of $1,200. I offer this simply by way of returning that courtesy which I remember, as a member of the minority, was tendered to our side of the House during the last Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that statement, Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the resolution.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not object. I think the resolution is entirely proper. But I would like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to state whether this additional employé is for both the minorities of the House. There are two. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not an expert on that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I will object unless both the minorities are allowed the same privileges.

Several MEMBERS. That will be a matter for future consideration.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By unanimous consent, bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were severally introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

TERM OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURT AT LITTLETON, N. H.

By Mr. DANIELL: A bill (H. R. 3590) to provide for a term of the circuit and district court at Littleton, N. H.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FRIDAY NIGHT SESSIONS.

By Mr. MARTIN: Resolution of Invalid Pensions Committee concerning Friday night sessions of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Rules.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. OATES. I offer the following resolution, which I ask the Clerk to report, and then I shall ask unanimous consent to have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing are hereby directed to inquire into and inform the House by what authority the compiler of the Congressional Directory embraced in the last edition thereof the appendix from pages 149 to 400, inclusive, the additional cost thereof, and whether the same should not be omitted from future editions of said Directory.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

NORFOLK AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY OF VIRGINIA.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: A bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CERTAIN GOODS IN BONDED WAREHOUSES

By Mr. COOMBS: A bill (H. R. 3592) to refund the certain goods remaining in bonded warehouse October 6, 1890—to the Committee on Claims.

SEVILLE SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

By Mr. RANDALL: A bill (H. R. 3593) to grant to the Seville Southern Railway Company a right to trestle across the shoal water between mainland on Charlotte Harbor to Pine Island, thence to La Costa Key; or from a point on Charlotte Harbor or Peace River to Gasparilla Island through the Government reservations to deep water on Charlotte Harbor, at the end of Gasparilla Island—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. RANDALL. I was about to suggest that that bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it should properly go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and it will be so referred.

STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE INDIANS.

By Mr. LYNCH: A bill (H. R. 3594) for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DAM ON TOMAHAWK RIVER, WISCONSIN.

By Mr. LYNCH: A bill (H. R. 3595) authorizing the erection and maintaining of a dam on the water reserve lands, and flowing the same, on Tomahawk River, Wisconsin—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PORT OF ENTRY, ASHLAND, WIS.

By Mr. LYNCH: A bill (H. R. 3596) to create a port of entry and delivery at the city of Ashland, in the county of Ashland, in the State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. BELKNAP obtained unanimous consent to introduce bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

LEASE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

A bill (H. R. 3597) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease certain public property—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3598) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the administration of justice in the Army," approved October 1, 1890—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REORGANIZATION OF THE INFANTRY OF THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3599) to reorganize the infantry of the Army and increase its efficiency—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARTILLERY OF THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3600) to reorganize the artillery and to increase its efficiency—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INCREASE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3601) to increase the efficiency of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXAMINATIONS OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3602) amending the act of October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein"—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES BEFORE COURT-MARTIALS.

A bill (H. R. 3603) amending section 1202 of Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the attendance of witnesses before a court-martial—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GRADE OF MEDICAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

A bill (H. R. 3604) to define the grade of certain medical officers of the Army, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXAMINATIONS OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY, ETC.

A bill (H. R. 3605) to repeal the provision in section 1 of the act of October 1, 1890, providing for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and to regulate promotions therein, and to extend promotion lineal to first lieutenants—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXTENSION OF FREE-DELIVERY SERVICE.

Mr. AMERMAN obtained unanimous consent to introduce bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3606) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department to cities, villages, and boroughs containing not less than 8,000 inhabitants from adjoining free-delivery offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

A bill (H. R. 3607) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

POST-OFFICE CLERKS.

Mr. WILSON of Missouri (by request) obtained unanimous consent to introduce a bill (H. R. 3608) for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices, and for fixing the salaries of the same; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REVENUE CUTTER FOR SERVICE IN THE HARBOR OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. CUTTING obtained unanimous consent to introduce a bill (H. R. 3609) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of a United States revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF 4½ PER CENT BONDS.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House, whether at any time since the 4½ per cent bonds became due there has been sufficient funds in the Treasury to pay the same; and, if so, by what authority he has assumed to continue any of such bonds at 2 per cent interest, and why the same were not all paid at the time said bonds were due.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE LATE HON. LEONIDAS C. HOUK.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, January 30, beginning at 1 o'clock p. m., be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of the Hon. Leonidas Campbell Houk, late a member of the House of Representatives from the second district of the State of Tennessee.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY AND BOARD ON GEOGRAPHIC NAMES.

Mr. RICHARDSON obtained unanimous consent to introduce the resolutions the titles of which were severally read, the resolutions ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

A concurrent resolution to print 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

A concurrent resolution to print extra copies of the report of the United States Board on Geographic Names.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I had the honor to introduce a bill providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents. That bill has been printed, and I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report it favorably to the House. It is desirable that the bill should be considered as soon as possible, and I therefore ask the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The order was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, January 16, 1892, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of House bill 3513, the bill providing for the public printing, binding, and distribution of public documents; that said bill shall be considered in the House; that it shall be first read throughout and then by items, and, as each item is read, it shall be open for amendment and debate as under the five-minute rule of the House when in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills, except that the previous question may be ordered at any time on any item of said bill after debate, when the House shall so determine. This order shall be a continuing order after the reading of the Journal each day until said bill has been finally disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's resolution proposes to have this bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, so that the previous question will apply to it. I desire to suggest to him whether it would not be as well to have it considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There being no rules yet adopted providing for the Committee of the Whole, I suppose the same object will be attained by considering the bill in the House under the five-minute rule. Of course I shall have no disposition to apply the previous question unless it becomes absolutely necessary, and then it will be in the power of the House to refuse it if the majority should so incline. So far as I am concerned I wish to have the fullest latitude of debate upon this bill and upon each item of it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course, if the bill is considered in the House the previous question will be applicable to the entire bill as well as to the several sections.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can assure the gentleman that I shall not be inclined to press the previous question unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it would be better to consider the bill in Committee of the Whole in the regular way. It is a very important measure.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] a question. Does his resolution refer to setting apart a day for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Printing, or for the consideration of one particular bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. For the consideration of this one bill.

Mr. McCREARY. Then I wish the gentleman from Tennessee would state why it is necessary now to set apart a day for the consideration of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The reason, Mr. Speaker, as I view it, is this: This is the only bill that comes before us growing directly out of any legislation of the last Congress. It is the report of the Joint Committee on Printing, which was authorized during the last session of Congress to investigate this subject. That committee have made a careful examination of the subject, and their report is now ready for consideration, and it seems to me desirable to have it considered as soon as possible.

Mr. McCREARY. If the report of the committee is ready, is there any good reason why we should not take it up and consider it to-day? I know of no special business engaging the House at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky I simply want to say that as a matter of convenience to the committee we have asked that Saturday be set apart for the consideration of the bill. While the report is ready, it has not been printed, and I presume gentlemen will want to see the report in print.

Mr. McCREARY. I thought the report had been printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he modify his order so as to provide that the bill shall be taken up in the regular way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What modification does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. DINGLEY. Simply that the resolution be made to provide that Saturday, after the reading of the Journal, be assigned for the consideration of the bill, and that the House then go into Committee of the Whole and consider it in the regular way.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Maine falls into an error. In the absence of rules there is no "regular way." The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has embodied in his resolution substantially the advantages which the House would have by considering the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. I had supposed from the rulings of the Speaker that we were acting under general parliamentary law as modified by the practice of the House.

Mr. OATES. The only difference between the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole and in the House, as proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, is that under the resolution as offered the previous question may be ordered on the different paragraphs of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely; that is the difference; that the previous question will be applicable under the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

By unanimous consent, bills, etc., of the following titles were severally introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as indicated below:

TRUSSES FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

By Mr. GANTZ: A bill (H. R. 3610) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers,' approved May 28, 1872," approved March 3, 1879—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FUNSTON: A bill (H. R. 3618) to authorize the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company to purchase certain land—to the Committee on Public Lands.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN KANSAS.

By Mr. FUNSTON: A bill (H. R. 3619) to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes and to fix the time for holding court therein—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANNIVERSARY OF DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

By Mr. HALL: A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, for a law declaring the anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, to wit, October 12, a day of national thanksgiving—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

By Mr. HALL: A bill (H. R. 3620) to declare the anniversary of the discovery of America a day of national thanksgiving—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

CLERKS TO REPRESENTATIVES.

By Mr. MORSE: A bill (H. R. 3621) to authorize the appointment and prescribe the compensation of clerks to Representatives and to pay them out of the contingent fund—to the Committee on Accounts.

STATUE TO MAJ. GEN. PUTNAM.

By Mr. COGSWELL: A bill (H. R. 3622) for the erection of a statue or monument in the city of Washington to the memory of Maj. Gen. Israel Putnam—to the Committee on the Library.

FORT SHERIDAN RESERVATION, NEBRASKA.

By Mr. KEM: A bill (H. R. 3623) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Sheridan reservation, of Nebraska, to actual settlers, under the provisions of the homestead laws—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Accounts, presented a report; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of the House (passed on the 7th instant) authorizing and directing said committee to designate the committees of the House to which the clerks provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, should be allowed and assigned for the present Congress, and to report by resolution to the House for its action thereon, respectfully report that they have examined into and considered said matter, and report to the House and recommend the passage of the following resolution, namely:

Resolved, That the thirty-seven clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, be, and they are hereby, allowed and assigned for the present Congress to the following-named committees, namely:

To the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk.
To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Territories, a clerk.
To the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk.
To the Committee on Manufactures, a clerk.
To the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, a clerk.
To the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, a clerk.
To the Committee on Education, a clerk.
To the Committee on Labor, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Militia, a clerk.
To the Committee on Patents, a clerk.
To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, two (assistant) clerks.
To the Committee on Pensions, a clerk.
To the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings, a clerk.
To the Committee on Accounts, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Library, a clerk.
To the Committee on Printing, a clerk.
To the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk.
To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Eleventh Census, a clerk.

To the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, a clerk.
To the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Columbian Exposition, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, a clerk.

Also resolved, That the pay of the clerks to committees of the House of Representatives which have been or may be hereafter authorized by the House who are paid during the session only shall begin from the time such clerks entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of the several committees employing clerks for the session only.

HARRY WELLES RUSK.
JOHN A. QUACKENBUSH.
A. J. PEARSON.
JOHN T. CUTTING.
GEORGE W. COOPER.
C. L. MOSES.

Mr. DICKERSON. On behalf of the minority of the Committee on Accounts I beg leave to submit a report, which I ask to have read. I will state before the reading of the report that it was prepared before a change was made in the majority report to-day with regard to the Committee on Mileage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The views of the minority will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolutions authorizing and directing said committee to designate the committees to which clerks should be assigned, and to report thereon by resolution, have considered the matter at length. The members were unable to agree upon a unanimous report, and the minority beg leave to submit their views and to recommend for adoption the accompanying resolution.

We find that annual clerks with fixed salaries have been provided by law for the following committees: Ways and Means, Appropriations, Agriculture, Claims, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, District of Columbia, Elections, Foreign Affairs, Indian Affairs, Invalid Pensions, Irrigation of Arid Lands, Judiciary, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post-Office and Post-Roads, Rivers and Harbors, War Claims, and Public Buildings and Grounds, and this committee can take no action as to any of them.

The remaining thirty-eight committees have not been provided with annual or session clerks and their right to clerks under the statute is made to depend entirely upon their necessity for clerical assistance. Therefore, in making the assignment, the only question submitted to this committee for its determination is the one of necessity.

Wherever there is a necessity for a clerk, it is the plain duty of the committee to make the assignment; and where the services of a clerk are not necessary, it is equally plain that the assignment ought not to be made.

It would be manifestly unjust to require the chairman or any member to perform mere clerical services for the committee, and thereby deprive him of the time he should devote to the investigation of measures, or to the business of his constituents; but to assign clerks where there is no necessity for it, is an unwarranted expenditure and palpable waste of the public funds. It would only serve to supply private secretaries to such members as were favored with the chairmanship of committees doing little or no business, and to discriminate against many members whose labors are most onerous and exacting.

We have attempted to make this assignment in a spirit of liberality, and have only consulted the record made by these several committees in our efforts to ascertain where clerks were needed. We have accepted their statements and reports for our guidance, and refer to them briefly for the consideration of the House, and at the same time invite attention to the costs.

Session clerks are by law paid $6 per day, or $180 per month. The two sessions of each Congress extend usually through ten months, making a total cost of each session clerk for this Congress $1,800.

From an inspection of the reports made we find that the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and the Committee on Public Buildings have made no report to this House upon any subject within the last six years, and they have had clerks at a cost of $5,400 each, or $10,800.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture has never made a report. It has had a clerk at a cost of $1,800.

The Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has only two reports in six years at a cost for clerks of $5,400.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department has only made one report in six years at an expense of $5,400

The Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department has made but two reports in six years; its clerks have cost $5,400.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice has made five reports in six years, at a cost for clerks of $5,400.

The Committee on the Militia has made six reports in six years, at a cost of $5,400 (none in the Fifty-first Congress).

The Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic has made seven reports in six years, at a cost of $5,400.

The Committee on the Revision of the Laws has made seven reports in six years (only one in the Fifty-first Congress), at a cost of $5,400.

The Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics has made four reports in six years, two of them being theoretical discussions of the subject of "air ships," at a cost of $5,400.

The Committee on Mileage has some labors to perform at the beginning of the first session of congress, and for a few days has use for a clerk, but, as the labors of the committee are completed before any work is referred to the other committees, an annual clerk from any of the committees can easily render all the necessary aid. This committee is informed that the chairman of the Committee on Mileage in the Fiftieth Congress refused to accept a clerk, declaring there was no necessity for one. If he is assigned it will add to the expenses $1,800.

The Committee on Mines and Mining has such limited jurisdiction that there is at present no appearance of needing a clerk. If in the future it becomes necessary, proper clerical aid can be given.

In the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses there was expended in salaries for clerks of the foregoing committees more than $75,000, which was (measured by the record they made) an extravagant and unauthorized expenditure.

If this Congress decides to adopt the same rule set by the Fifty-first Congress and approves the assignment of clerks to these committees, it will be an unnecessary increase of the expenses of Congress at least $27,000. The minority believes there ought to be inaugurated an era of retrenchment and reform, and a rigidly economical administration of affairs, and it is proper it should initiate the movement in matters pertaining directly to the House. It is an evidence of good faith, and places the members in position to demand economy in the several Departments.

For the reasons herein stated, the minority felt constrained to disagree to the report of the committee recommending the adoption of a resolution assigning clerks to the thirty-eight committees, and to recommend as a substitute therefor the following:

Resolved, That a clerk be assigned to each of the following committees, viz:
Committee on Banking and Currency.
Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.
Committee on the Territories.
Committee on Railways and Canals.
Committee on Manufactures.
Committee on the Pacific Railroads.
Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.
Committee on Education.
Committee on Labor.
Committee on Patents.
Committee on Pensions.
Committee on Private Land Claims.
Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.
Committee on Accounts.
Committee on the Library.
Committee on Enrolled Bills.
Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
Committee on Election of the President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.
Committee on the Eleventh Census.
Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.
Committee on the Columbian Exposition.
Committee on Printing.

And that two assistant clerks be assigned to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and one assistant clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs.

W. W. DICKERSON.
JOHN J. SEERLEY.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the two reports be laid over and printed. There is a general request that that course be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] in charge of the majority report first, and after that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection on the part of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] to the request that the two reports be printed and lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLOUNT. Print it in the RECORD.

Mr. BOATNER. Before that is done I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Let the reports and the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to appear in the attitude of preventing any member of the House from getting any information he may desire on the subject, and if the report can be printed in the RECORD so that the matter can come up to-morrow, I will offer no objection to the delay for one day.

Mr. BOATNER. Before that is done I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland to allow me to offer an amendment to the report, which I would like to have printed also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment to the committee report, which he asks to have printed with it, and lie over.

Mr. HOLMAN. Print it in the RECORD?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following words:

"And that each Representative not chairman of a committee is hereby authorized to appoint a private secretary for the session at a salary of $75 per month, the said secretaries to be paid in same manner and out of the same fund as the clerks of the several committees."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] asks to have this amendment considered as pending.

Mr. BOATNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve all points of order against that amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON. I ask now that both reports, including the amendment against which the point of order is reserved, be printed in the RECORD and lie over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that both reports lie over until to-morrow and be printed in the RECORD, and that this include the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER]. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By unanimous consent bills of the following titles were severally introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred as follows:

SINKING FUND.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 3624) to repeal the law creating the sinking fund—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

By Mr. WILLCOX: A bill (H. R. 3625) to amend section 3241 of the Revised Statutes, relating to internal revenue.

Mr. WILLCOX. I wish that to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is an amendment of a public statute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does it reduce taxation?

Mr. WILLCOX. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman to say it does not affect the revenue.

Mr. WILLCOX. Not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks, then, that it may go the Committee on the Judiciary, and that order will be made.

GAINESVILLE, M'CALLISTER AND ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H. R. 3626) to grant to the Gainesville, McCallister and St. Louis Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GAINESVILLE, OKLAHOMA AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H. R. 3627) to grant to the Gainesville, Oklahoma and Gulf Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HOBOKEN, N. J.

By Mr. McDONALD: A bill (H. R. 3628) to increase the limit of cost of the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

By Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 3629) to reclassify and fix the salaries of persons in the Railway Mail Service known as postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SURVEY OF CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER, GEORGIA.

By Mr. MOSES: A bill (H. R. 3630) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause an examination and survey to be made and the cost of improvement to be estimated of the Chattahoochee River between West Point, Ga., and Franklin, Ga.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress, in money, public lands, bonds, or by indorsement, or by pledge of the public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises of corporations, independent of the question of the constitutional power of Congress to make such grants, is unjust and impolitic, and in manifest conflict with the spirit of our republican institutions, as it directly tends to create and foster the wealth of favored classes at the expense of the whole people who bear the burdens of government, and manifestly furnishes undue facilities for the enlargement of great private estates—a policy which a government of the people can not justly or safely encourage by any form of favoritism in legislation.

Resolved, In view of the present condition of the Treasury, and because efficient and honest government can only be assured by the frugal expenditure of the public money, while unnecessary and lavish expenditure, under any and all conditions, leads inevitably to venal and corrupt methods in public affairs, no money ought to be appropriated by Congress from the public Treasury except such as is manifestly necessary to carry on the several Departments frugally, efficiently, and honestly administered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman seek to have this resolution referred?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I offer it for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has just been reported by the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us hear that resolution read again. There was so much confusion on the floor that it was impossible to hear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent the resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that that might be offered without requiring unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that in the introduction of bills and resolutions from time to time the Chair has tried to comply with the rule heretofore adopted providing for the jurisdiction of committees and the reference of bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course a motion to consider is in order. Just such a resolution, or one substantially the same, except the first clause, was adopted in the Forty-fourth Congress before the rules were adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the rule under which references have heretofore been made was adopted by the House for a limited period, and the action that has been taken has been under that rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. In order to avoid any delay, I presume there will be no objection to the consideration of this resoultion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to hear the statement of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose a motion made to consider the resolution would be in order; and I do not suppose there is any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine and see whether the rule heretofore adopted covers the case, and, if not, the House will have latitude for its consideration. [After a pause.] The Chair was of opinion from memory that the rule heretofore adopted, as to the jurisdiction of committees and the reference of bills, covered this resolution; but, on examination, thinks that it was limited in time, and that it exhausted itself with the days for which provision was made. The Chair remembers, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will probably remember, that the resolution was first drawn up without limit, but was limited by action subsequently taken. So that the Chair is of opinion that the House to-day has power to do what it sees fit with this resolution now, and bases this decision upon one made by his predecessor [Mr. CARLISLE] in the Forty-ninth Congress, which will be remembered by those who were in that Congress, touching the French spoliation claims, a resolution concerning them being brought in before the adoption of the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have asked for the present consideration of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. HEARD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. [After a pause.] I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion for the previous question, but will renew it on the vote on the resolution.

Mr. BUSHNELL rose and addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Discussion on a motion for the previous question is not in order.

Mr. BUSHNELL. It seems to me that the resolution ought not to be adopted without our knowing what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If further discussion of the resolution be desired, that can be accomplished by voting down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HEARD. I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask——

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means. That will be in order.

The question was taken on the motion to refer, and a division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 115.

So the motion to refer was rejected.

Mr. BOATNER. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not open for amendment pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BOATNER. I understood that the demand for the previous question was withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. HEARD. I withdrew the demand for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now rise to demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to have the resolution read.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana does not go far enough in the declaration of Democratic principles, and I ask——

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will allow me, I will have to insist on the previous question.

Mr. BOATNER. I will ask the gentleman to allow my amendment to be read for information.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize no one until the House comes to order.

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The Chair will recognize no gentleman until the House is in order. [After a pause.] The gentleman from California will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKENNA. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether under the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana there is a single bill that has been introduced in this House or can be introduced in this House carrying one dollar of appropriation for any purpose except the mere running of the Departments, and whether if it were passed it would not defeat the purposes of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKENNA. Well, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would not impose so many restrictions, and I will be glad to see it adopted.

Mr. McKENNA. What is the gentleman's answer to that question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask that the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has already been twice reported, but if there be no objection it will be again reported.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he is not willing to have some debate upon this resolution, as we do not seem to be troubled for time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know of any rule upon the subject for debate at this time. The language of this resolution is certainly very plain, and it will admit of but one interpretation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It may be plain to the gentleman from Indiana, yet not so to other people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection myself to debate.

Mr. FUNSTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FUNSTON. I wish to inquire whether under the rules of Congress we are not entitled to have twenty minutes' debate on each side in any case where there has been no previous debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was under a special rule. The Chair knows of no principle upon which that can be applied in this case. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. REED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. If the House orders the previous question, then, under general parliamentary law, there will be no debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There will be no debate.

Mr. REED. And this will not be "a deliberative body!" [Laughter.]

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker declared that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 106, noes 54.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 81, not voting 84; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. WILSON of Kentucky.

Mr. PATTISON of Ohio with Mr. REYBURN.

Mr. WILLIAMS of North Carolina with Mr. HUFF.

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. DOLLIVER.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. DANIELL with Mr. WEAVER.

Mr. GORMAN with Mr. GRISWOLD.

Mr. BRANCH with Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reasonable debate may be had on these resolutions, say a half hour on each side.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, we want two hours on this side.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that a half an hour on a side is sufficient.

Mr. REED. We want two hours. While we are debating we shall not be appropriating. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the amount of time to be given for debate will be determined by a vote of the House. I would be willing to consent to an hour on each side.

Mr. REED. The gentleman could have done that if he had not had the previous question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to two hours on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that there be debate on this proposition for two hours on each side?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] desire that the debate shall be under the five-minute rule or under the hour rule?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the debate be under the hour rule.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to ask whether this arrangement includes the People's party as well as the Democratic and the Republican parties. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The right of debate is equal on the part of all members.

Mr. SIMPSON. Very well.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Two hours to each side—that makes six hours. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no arrangement for the control of the time, the Chair will recognize gentlemen for an hour under the general practice of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My inquiry is whether this arrangement provides for four hours' debate, or for six hours. If there are three parties in this House, if each side is to have two hours, that will make six hours. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I will state, for the information of the gentleman, that there are three parties here. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair supposes, the "sides" contemplated by the motion of the gentleman from Indiana included those favoring the proposition and those opposing it. [Cries of "That is right."] The Chair will construe the arrangement as meaning that two hours shall be allowed to gentlemen in favor of the proposition and two hours to those opposing it.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of convenience, I suggest that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] control the time of those who are opposed to this proposition.

Mr. REED. If the Chair please, I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, should more properly control the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Iowa will be recognized to control the two hours in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] control the time in favor of it? I ask unanimous consent that it may be so understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection to that proposition——

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I object. I believe in the Speaker controlling the time in this House. I object to both propositions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for one hour, and will then make such other recognition as may seem proper at the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. If any gentleman desires a portion of this hour, I would be glad to have him take it at this time. I do not wish to debate the question at any length.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There is not very much business crowding us now. I suggest we might adjourn for to-day and take up this debate immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, and spend a pleasant day in the discussion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have not the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment, the Chair desires to lay before the House——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It is understood——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be kind enough to suspend for a moment until the Chair shall have submitted to the House several communications now on the desk.

WAR CLAIMS.

There being no objection,

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings of that court in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States, and the same were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

William M. Murdock; James M. Provine, deceased; Michael Schwartz, deceased; Henry Badley, deceased; Wilkin Thomas; Madison Lewallen, deceased; Albert H. Sprich; Edward V. Dickens; Rebecca L. Bolling; Charlotte C. Bancroft, deceased; Hugh Carothers; Elzira Hamilton; Mary T. Leake; J. and J. Steele; George F. Hunt, deceased; Joseph T. Knight, deceased; Emily R. Martin, deceased; Jane W. Cannon, deceased.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. BANKHEAD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3631) to provide for an income tax, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Way and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PLUMBING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3632) to authorize the appointment of an inspector of plumbing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHTS OF WORKING WOMEN.

Mr. ENLOE. I send to the Clerk's desk a memorial, and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

A memorial, presented by request of Charlotte Smith, president of the Woman's National Industrial League of America, in behalf of the working women of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have this memorial printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Several MEMBERS. What is the paper?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the title, if there be no objection.

The title of the memorial was again read.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask that this memorial be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks for the reading of the memorial.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to ask a question which I think is proper at this point. If this memorial be read, will it then have to be spread upon the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not necessarily.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply object to its being spread upon the RECORD.

Mr. ENLOE. I have not asked for the printing of the paper in the RECORD; I simply asked that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that on the introduction of bills, when there is a request for the reading and they are read, they are not generally printed as a matter of course in the RECORD, on account of that reading.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Does not a paper go into the RECORD as a matter of course, when it has been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that in the introduction of bills, when their reading is called for and they are read for information, they are not usually printed in the RECORD. However, it can be done in this case if the House chooses to give its consent.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. But, Mr. Speaker, if the resolutions are read at this time they will inevitably go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not necessarily.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. I yielded, or rather suspended, the motion to adjourn at the request of the Speaker, as the Chair will remember.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is entirely correct, and the Chair feels compelled to recognize the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I did not yield for the purpose of reopening the matter of the introduction of bills or resolutions of any kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky suspended his motion at the request of the Chair to allow certain communications from the Departments to be laid before the House.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow this memorial to be read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it now, and allow it to come up to-morrow. I dislike very much to refuse.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the American Paper Manufacturers' Association, praying for the passage of a bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of merchants, manufacturers, and representatives of the municipal government held at the Merchants' Exchange in the city of St. Louis, Mo., November 24, 1891, favoring the enactment by Congress of a measure separate from the river and harbor bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River, and also for the building of three dredge boats by the Government to be operated between the mouth of the Illinois River and the mouth of the Ohio River, for the purpose of affording temporary relief pending the permanent improvement of the Mississippi River; and also favoring Senate bill 1199, introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

These resolutions were presented yesterday by my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL]. I notice in them a resolution asking the Senators and Representatives from Missouri to introduce a measure at once for the building of three dredge boats, two to be under the control of the Mississippi River Commission, and one under the control of the resident engineer at St. Louis. I have addressed a communication to the Chief of the Engineer Bureau in regard to the probable cost of the dredge boats and the necessity for their construction, and if they are necessary at what time they can be constructed. There is also a resolution asking that the bill which has been incorporated in the resolutions should be introduced, and when that order of business is reached I shall introduce the bill. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a petition of astronomers of the country favoring a change of the management of the new Astronomical Observatory from the Navy Department to the civil administration. It is a very important paper, signed by nearly all of the most noted astronomers of the country. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Temperance Association of Friends, of Philadelphia, Pa., and a petition of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Association of Friends, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the ratification of the so-called Brussels treaty; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Presbyterian Church of Everett, Pa., praying governmental aid for the World's Columbian Fair on condition that it be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committe on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New Hampshire, representing 125 pastors and preachers and 14,500 members, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of 42 citizens of Decatur County, Iowa, and a petition of 42 citizens of Calhoun County, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill similar to the one known in the Fifty-first Congress as the Conger lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Morning Sun, Iowa, representing 127 members, praying that the grant of $5,000,000 to aid the World's Columbian Exposition be conditioned on the closing of the Exposition on Sunday, that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited on the grounds, and that purity be preserved in the art department; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of 31 citizens of Decatur County, Iowa, and a petition of 68 citizens of Calhoun County, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill similar to the one known in the Fifty-first Congress as the Butterworth option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PEFFER presented a petition of citizens of Greenwood, Kans., praying for an increase of the circulating medium by purchasing silver to pay the public creditors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of Harriet Williams, of New Berne, N. C., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of the Wahpakoota and Medawakauton bands of the Santee Sioux Indians, praying for legislative relief as provided by the terms of the treaties of 1838 and 1853; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER presented the memorial of Samuel F. Tappan, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 456, for the relief of Theodore R. Timby; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Portland, Me., praying for the passage of the bill to transfer the Revenue Marine Service to the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2) for the relief of Ezra S. Havens;
A bill (S. 3) for the relief of Napoleon B. Giddings;
A bill (S. 4) for the relief of Alfred J. Worcester;
A bill (S. 5) for the relief of John S. Neet, jr.; and
A bill (S. 6) for the relief of Joseph W. Carmack.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 901) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Allentown, in the State of Pennsylvania, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill (S. 727) for the relief of H. C. Stanton, of Roseburg, Oregon, administrator of the estate of James Sinclair, and his widow, Mary Sinclair, and for the relief of Erastus S. Joslyn, of Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, was introduced and referred under a misapprehension to the Committee on Military Affairs. The claim was sent at the last Congress to the Court of Claims. I therefore move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1030) for the relief of F. F. White, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 408) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Fernandina, in the State of Florida, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1617) to carry into effect the recommendation of the board of admirals convened pursuant to the joint resolution approved February 5, 1879, in the case of Commander Henry Glass, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. I also introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I desire to state that the bill is in relation to the equipment of cars; it was forwarded to me by Mr. Rogers, chairman of the railroad commission of New York, and also a member of an organization having under discussion that special subject. I therefore introduce the bill so that it may have consideration by the committee.

The bill (S. 1618) to promote the safety of employés and travelers, by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes; was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 1622) for the relief of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1623) granting a pension to William Lukens; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1624) to authorize the Quanah and Oklahoma Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 1625) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Massillon, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1626) for the relief of William B. Burnet; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1627) providing for sundry lighthouses and other aids to navigation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 1628) granting a pension to Daniel Kendall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 1629) for the relief of Alison J. Tinsley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 1630) for the relief of T. H. Church; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1631) to establish a life-saving station at Gay Head, on the coast of Massachusetts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1632) for the establishment of a light and fog signal station near Butler Flats, New Bedford, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1633) supplementary and amendatory to an act entitled "An act to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians and the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1634) to provide for a final settlement with the Naalem band of the Tillamook tribe of Indians of Oregon, in accordance with a certain agreement between the United States and the said Indians, dated the 6th day of August, 1851; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1635) to provide for a final settlement with the Tillamook tribe of Indians of Oregon, in accordance with a certain agreement between the United States and the said Indians, dated the 7th day of August, 1851; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 1636) for the relief of Noah Seanor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 1637) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 1638) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against George Alcott on the rolls of the War Department; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 1639) for the relief of Sallie Hardmond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1640) for the relief of Charles L. Scudder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 1641) for the relief of Thomas D. Murrin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 1642) making an appropriation to complete the improvement of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois River to the mouth of the Ohio River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COLORADO SCHOOL OF MINES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed, and the Calendar is in order.

The bill (S. 1374) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear an explanation of the bill. Why is the State of Colorado to receive this gift in addition to the other gifts she has received?

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill has heretofore passed the Senate on the report of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] from the Committee on Public Lands. He will explain it.

Mr. TELLER. When the Senate gets still enough so that anybody may be heard, I can perhaps explain the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. TELLER. Colorado has for many years, commencing with its Territorial existence, maintained a school of mines for the education of young men in metallurgy, chemistry, and mining engineering. There have been of course other mining schools, notably the school at Columbia College, New York, where the same branches have been taught.

I have had occasion to say before, and I repeat now, that on this continent there has been no school where I think so complete a mining education has been obtainable as at the school of mines in Colorado. It is a State institution supported by a yearly tax upon the people of the State. It is practically free to all citizens of the United States, the charges being simply nominal; and I think we have had in the school of mines students from nearly every State in the Union, certainly from all the Western States. It has not had the reputation that the school at Freiburg has gained, yet I have no hesitation in saying that if I had a boy whom I desired to bring up as a mining engineer I should much prefer to send him to the mining school at Golden, in the State of Colorado, than to Freiburg. It is in the immediate vicinity of the great mines of this continent, where the students can have access in a few hours to all the intricate machinery required for the reduction of metals. It is in the neighborhood of the great smelters at Denver and only 118 miles from the great smelters at Pueblo. It is about 100 miles from the great mining district of Leadville and about 25 miles from what are known as the mining districts of Clear Creek and Gilpin Counties, two counties that have produced something over $100,000,000 of bullion, mostly gold. There mining may be seen by these students in its advanced state.

There are no people in the world who have mined with greater care and intelligence than we have in this country within the last fifteen or twenty years. There is no State in the Union where mining has been carried on with as much system and with as much intelligence as in the State of Colorado.

The school is brought in close connection with not only the mining of gold and silver but also coal, because there are coal mines immediately in the neighborhood within a mile of the school, and coal of all kinds and all descriptions.

This school has been maintained by the State, as I said, and everybody has had the advantage of it. The State of Colorado is somewhat young, and we pay for every mining claim that we take up $5 an acre, whether it is good or whether it is bad. Of course when a man gets a good mine it is merely a nominal sum, of no account, but there are hundreds of acres of land that have been taken up and the Government has been paid for as mineral land that has no real value whatever and has never returned anything to the locator.

We thought it was not unreasonable, as long as we held this school open to all the citizens of the United States, inasmuch as the Government is assisting in the agricultural education of our youth, that it should assist also in their education in the practical business of mining.

I suppose the Senator from Missouri who makes the inquiry is quite familiar with the great amount of mineral that is produced in the United States. I do not now speak particularly of the precious metals, but of iron, copper, and lead, as well as silver and gold. I presume he knows that the industry of mining has become one of the great industries of the country.

The bill provides for the payment of 25 per cent—that is an error; it should have been 50 per cent—of the mining returns from the sale of mineral lands, but not to exceed $12,000 per annum, and not that sum unless the State should annually appropriate that amount or more. I will say that the State has appropriated a very much greater amount than that every year. The State has erected very suitable buildings; it has provided machinery of all kinds, and, as I said, it is a place where any student in the United States can certainly acquire as complete a mining education as he can at any place on the face of the earth, Freiburg not excepted.

If it is now in order to move an amendment, I will move, in line 3, to strike out the word "twenty-five," before "per centum," and insert "fifty," which is the way the bill passed the Senate heretofore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment does not increase the amount, because the amount is limited to $12,000.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of section 1, strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the word "fifty;" so as to read:

That the State of Colorado shall annually receive 50 per cent of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within the State of Colorado, for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Golden, in the county of Jefferson, in said State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before it is voted upon, do I understand that in the measure passed at the last Congress the amount was 50 per cent?

Mr. TELLER. It was passed on the former occasion at 50 per cent. It was owing to an error in introducing the bill that it came in at 25 per cent.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator himself introduced the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I introduced it, and inadvertently introduced it as it was originally introduced some years ago, and not as it passed the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 9 of section 1, after the word "amount," I move to insert the word "annually;" so that the State shall annually appropriate as much as the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 9, after the word "amount," insert the word "annually;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That said sum so to be paid shall not exceed the sum of $12,000 per annum, nor shall it exceed the amount annually expended by the State of Colorado for said school of mines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the city of Chamberlain, in Brulé County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the words "Secretary of War," in line 14, at the end of section 1, to insert "or said bridge may be constructed as a wagon and foot bridge alone;" so as to make the section read:

That the Chamberlain Pontoon Bridge Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of South Dakota, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in the State of South Dakota, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, wagons, and vehicles of all kinds, steam and street cars, animals, foot passengers, and for all road travel, for such reasonable rates of toll and under such reasonable rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said corporation and approved by the Secretary of War, or said bridge may be constructed as a wagon and foot bridge alone.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "pontoon," to strike out "drawspan;" in the same line, before the word "drawspan," to strike out "pontoon," and after the word "drawspan" to insert "giving a clear opening;" in line 6, before the word "said," to strike out "the piers of;" in the same line, after the word "bridge," to insert "other than the drawspan;" after the words "shall be," at the end of line 6, to strike out "parallel with and the bridge itself;" and in line 8, after the word "river," to insert "at high water;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall be constructed as a pontoon bridge, and shall contain a drawspan giving a clear opening of not less than 300 feet in length, which drawspan shall be maintained over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and said bridge other than the drawspan shall be at right angles to the current of the river at high water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, line 15, before the word "obstruct," to insert "unreasonably;" and in line 17, before the word "obstruct," to insert "unreasonably;" so as to read:

No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of said river, and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, unreasonably obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause the entire removal thereof or such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction, and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions shall be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso at the end of section 3:

Provided, That said company may construct a wagon and foot bridge, and in case of the construction of a wagon and foot bridge alone the draws shall be of the same length herein provided, and shall be of such construction as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and shall be subject to all the provisions herein contained in respect to being promptly opened to permit the unobstructed navigation of said river and for keeping the same lighted as herein provided in case of a railroad and wagon bridge, and in such case the provisions herein in relation to the use for railroad purposes shall not apply.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 6, after the word "examination," to insert the word "and;" in the same line, after the word "approval," to strike out "and;" in line 9, before the words "the banks," to strike out "topography of" and insert "high and low water lines upon;" in line 10, after the word "river," to strike out "the shore lines at high and low water;" in line 11, after the words "currents at," to strike out "all stages and" and insert "low water and at high water, with;" in line 13, after the word "stream," to insert the word "and;" and after the word "bridges," at the end of line 13, to insert "such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the high and low water lines upon the banks of the river, the direction and strength of the currents at low water and at high water, with the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges, such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject, and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of its construction such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the words "from the," to strike out "time this act takes effect," and insert "date hereof;" and in line 6, after the word "whenever," to strike out "it may think;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof: Provided, That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act whenever the public interests so require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HALL OF RECORDS.

The bill (S. 430) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CIVILIAN ENGINEERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a statement, showing the names and place of residence of each civilian engineer employed from July 1, 1890, to June 30, 1891, in the work of improving the rivers and harbors, the time employed, compensation paid, and the place or the work on which employed; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

KENNEBEC RIVER, MAINE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of the examination and survey of Kennebec River, Maine, from Waterville to the steamboat wharf, Augusta; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 69) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.—to the Committee on Claims;

A bill (S. 593) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Drayton, N. Dak.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce;

A bill (S. 747) to repeal section 4145 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to amend sections 4146, 4320, also section 1 of the act amending section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, approved March 3, 1883, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means;

A bill (S. 902) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bradford, Pa.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds;

A bill (S. 1074) to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Oregon—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce;

A bill (S. 1104) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of two United States revenue cutters for service on the Pacific coast—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce;

A bill (S. 1122) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia—to the Committee on Claims; and

A bill (S. 1183) to extend the privileges of transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to the port of Sandusky, Ohio—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. WILSON of West Virginia to withdraw the papers in the pension claim of Thomas P. Lilley without leaving copies.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration the report of the Committee on Accounts submitted on yesterday and printed in the RECORD of this morning, which was laid over until to-day.

Mr. ENLOE. Before that is taken up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the memorial read which I offered on yesterday afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield for that purpose.

Mr. RUSK. I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] asks unanimous consent for the introduction of a memorial for reference, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial presented by request of Charlotte Smith, president of the Woman's National Industrial League of America, in behalf of the working women of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This memorial will be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. ENLOE. I did not ask for its reference, but for its reading at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the memorial?

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Mr. BYNUM. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] has a right to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The business indicated by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] will of course take precedence. The unanimous consent asked by the Chair was only for the introduction of the memorial for reference.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, what I requested was that the bill be read to the House. It is not a matter which demands immediate consideration, and if there is objection to its being read I will withdraw the request for the present. At some other time when we are not busy I will take it up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] withdraws the request.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. ENLOE. To that I object, and I object to anything else being taken up except the special order.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the special order?

Mr. BYNUM. The resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on yesterday, as I understand it, is the special order. The previous question having been ordered, I make the point that there is no business in order except the debate that was agreed to by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has not called up the resolution.

Mr. BYNUM. It comes up of itself, without being specially called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was informed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had consented to let this report take precedence. However, if the point is made the Chair will decide it.

Mr. BYNUM. I make the point of order that the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] takes precedence.

Mr. HOLMAN. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that inasmuch as the matter reported to the House by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] came in first, it might be as well to dispose of it. I do not suppose it will occupy much time, and yet I would be very glad to have these resolutions considered at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. BYNUM. I insist upon my point of order that, the previous question having been ordered, nothing else is in order except the immediate consideration of the resolution, and I think we ought to carry out the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to make the point. The Chair had supposed from the statement of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] that the matter had been arranged so that there would be no controversy over it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] makes the point that the previous question having been ordered upon the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that takes precedence.

Mr. RUSK. I will then ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I have introduced be taken up to-morrow for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK] asks unanimous consent that the resolution referred to be taken up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. The Chair thinks that it would come up in its order anyway, but if there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] withdraws his objection to the presentation of the matter which I wish to get before the House.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAINES. I wish to ask this, in view of the fact that the second of these resolutions is a business proposition, while the first contains some stump speeches and material for several political platforms, as to whether the Chair will rule that we can have a separate vote on these two resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The attention of the Chair had not been called to it before, but before the vote is taken the Chair will examine the resolution and pass upon the question when the time arrives. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] consents to withdraw his point for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] objected to any other matters than the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] to withdraw his objection to allow the introduction of bills for reference.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, and I am willing to let any others in for the same purpose, and therefore I will withdraw my objection.

MERCHANT MARINE, ETC.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 320) to create a home for crippled, infirm, and aged seamen of the merchant marine service; also, sundry petitions and resolutions asking for the construction of revenue cutters; also, for the building of additional light-houses and fog signals on the Great Lakes; for the increase of salary to keepers and crews of life-saving stations, and asked that that committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that said bills and petitions be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who reports back sundry matters with the request that his committee be discharged from further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, also requested that the petition by Mr. PICKLER relative to the re-establishment of our commerce upon the ocean be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By unanimous consent, bills of the following titles were introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

SECTION 1218 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

By Mr. HERBERT: A bill (H. R. 3725) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RETURN REQUESTS ON ENVELOPES.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 3729) to repeal so much of section 3915 of the Revised Statues of the United States as permits the Postmaster-General to have return requests printed on envelopes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF THE FLORIDA AND CREEK WAR.

By Mr. WINN: A bill (H. R. 3730) to pension officers and soldiers enlisted in the military service of the United States in the Florida and Creek war—to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the bill to pension officers and soldiers enlisted in the military service in the Florida and Creek war referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that that bill goes to the Committee on Pensions. Bills for granting pensions for all those who have been engaged in the United States service, except during the civil war, go to the Committee on Pensions.

PAYMENT FOR PROPERTY, ETC., LOST OR DESTROYED IN THE UNITED STATES SERVICE.

By Mr. WINN: A bill (H. R. 3731) to provide for payment for horses and other property lost in the United States service—to the Committee on War Claims.

GRANTING LIQUOR LICENSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By Mr. RUSK: A bill (H. R. 3732) to amend an act approved February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to prohibit the granting of liquor licenses within one mile of the Soldiers' Home"—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LIEN UPON REAL ESTATE.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: A bill (H. R. 3733) providing the judgments rendered in United States courts shall not be a lien upon real estate in any other county than the one in which the court is situate unless a transcript of the judgment be first filed in such county—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NONLEGAL-TENDER CONTRACT.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 3734) to repeal the power of nonlegal-tender contract authorized by the silver-bullion act of July 14, 1890—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

ADJUSTMENT OF NATIONAL DISPUTES.

By Mr. MARTIN: A joint resolution (H. Res. 55) looking to the adoption of means for the adjustment of international disputes without resort to war—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

RANK AND PAY OF SOLDIERS OF THE LATE WAR.

By Mr. PATTON: A bill (H. R. 3735) concerning rank and pay of soldiers who did duty as officers in the war of 1861—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FORT TOTTEN MILITARY RESERVATION, NORTH DAKOTA.

By Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 3736) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands, heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation, for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

INCREASE OF PENSION FOR THE LOSS OF SIGHT OF BOTH EYES.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: A bill (H. R. 3737) to increase the pension of those who have lost the sight of both eyes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY AT LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 3738) to construct a road from Little Rock, Ark., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 875) for the relief of Thomas Guinean;

A bill (S. 800) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas certain lands therein;

A bill (S. 636) for the relief of Chester B. Sweet, of California;

A bill (S. 625) to grant to the State of Oregon townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, for a public park;

A bill (S. 386) to provide for the disposal of Fort Hartsuff, Fort Sheridan, and Fort McPherson military reservations, in the State of Nebraska, to actual settlers, under the provisions of the homestead laws; and

A bill (S. 70) to increase the limit of cost of the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House, the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress, in money, public lands, bonds, or by indorsement, or by pledge of the public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises of corporations, independent of the question of the constitutional power of Congress to make such grants, is unjust and impolitic, and in manifest conflict with the spirit of our republican institutions, as it directly tends to create and foster the wealth of favored classes at the expense of the whole people who bear the burdens of government, and manifestly furnishes undue facilities for the enlargement of great private estates—a policy which a government of the people can not justly and safely encourage by any form of favoritism in legislation.

Resolved, In view of the present condition of the Treasury, and because efficient and honest government can only be assured by the frugal expenditure of the public money, while unnecessary and lavish expenditure, under any and all conditions, leads inevitably to venal and corrupt methods in public affairs, no money ought to be appropriated by Congress from the public Treasury except such as is manifestly necessary to carry on the several Departments frugally, efficiently, and honestly administered—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the arrangement made yesterday the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] will control the time in opposition to this resolution. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana for an hour in support of the resolution.

[Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be considerable misunderstanding as to the meaning of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]; and in view of the explanation which he has just given, I suggest that perhaps that explanation can be put in the form of words, and that we can make the resolution so clear that we can all vote for it. I would ask the Clerk to read a proposed substitute which, if I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], will perhaps meet his views.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be read in the time of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The resolution may be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, As the sense of the House, that while it is the duty of Congress to limit appropriations to the requirements of an efficient, honest, economical, and statesmanlike administration of national affairs, and always with the view of promoting public and not private interests, yet the functions of the nation and the duties of Congress are not restricted to simply providing the means for carrying on the several Departments, but extend to appropriations for such other objects of national importance as, in the judgment of the people and of Congress, are directly or indirectly for the benefit of the country as a whole, and are not likely to be secured by private enterprise—among which are the establishment of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, agricultural experimental stations, and the Geological Survey for the benefit of agriculture and mining and other industries, the improvement of rivers and harbors and the maintenance of lights and beacons and postal communication by land and sea for the promotion of commerce, and the maintenance of soldiers' homes and a pension system for the benefit of those who have imperiled their lives in the defense of the nation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not my friend add the Book of Estimates also? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DINGLEY. If I understand the gentleman from Indiana correctly, that substitute expressed the substance of the explanation that the gentleman has made of the meaning of his own resolution. Now, I ask unanimous consent that that substitute may be offered at the proper time and a vote be had upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks unanimous consent that the proposed substitute may be considered as pending, and that a vote may be had upon it at the proper time.

Mr. BURROWS. There ought to be no objection to that.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether I want to object to it or not until I hear it read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the resolution will be again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that the purpose of the original proposition is sufficiently clear. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.] There are some purposes named in the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Maine about which a diversity of opinion might exist, and none of them beneficial or of public interest, that are not covered by the resolution already pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which is under discussion is not in language or in spirit the same as the resolutions which the gentleman from Indiana has had read this morning. In the resolutions of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses the then present financial condition of the country was expressly referred to in connection with the voting of subsidies, bounties, moneys, etc. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that the conditions are identical now. The country and this House will readily see that the point is not well made. At that time we were under a heavy and oppressive load of debt. Under Republican management we are getting rid of the debt; and the people will pay off their mortgages before they look after the luxuries of their homes. Before that they take only the necessaries.

But in addition to that, in both of the resolutions named the words "public service" are used. In the resolution before the House it is the departmental service which is referred to, and I do not think that the gentleman will find many lawyers agreeing with him in his construction of the resolutions, that they mean identically the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend point out the difference between the two terms?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Suppose the resolution should say "the Department of the Interior," and that all appropriations should be limited to that. Would we then have the right to make appropriations for the building of a new war vessel or even for a new public work outside of the departmental service?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then it refers to Department work.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just one word. You can do anything pertaining to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Yes, for purely departmental work; but I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that he has plenty of time reserved to answer in his own time.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. If we had a day for debate I might branch out into these subjects; but I do not intend to do so in the limited time I have; neither do I want to be drawn into a defense of subsidies. But these resolutions are not identical. The others referred to the public service; and under these resolutions as they stand not a private pension bill can be put through this House, and nothing in the nature of public works can be passed by this House if we are bound by these resolutions. That is a fair construction of them.

But what are these resolutions here for? What bounties does the gentleman refer to? I understand him this morning to mean bounties on sugar. I am not going to speak for my side of the House on that point, but I will speak for myself, and say that if all of you on that side of the House want to cancel the bounties on sugar, you may find me voting with you. What have you got these bounties here in the form of "lands" in these resolutions for? I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana to answer in his own time. Is there any proposition to give a bounty of land for any purpose? Is such a proposition in the mind of a citizen of the Republic? Does not the gentleman know that since 1867—I think that was the year—no such proposition has been brought before the American Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. Eighteen hundred and seventy-three.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What year was it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Eighteen hundred and seventy-three.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Well, 1873; I did not speak with accuracy, but I think it was before that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The grant to the Southern Railroad was in 1873.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Before that time President Grant had declared against it, and the Republican party has stood upon that declaration. But does not the gentleman from Indiana know that the bounty land system was inaugurated in his own party under the leadership of Stephen A. Douglas? And what does he bring in that whip and lash for here now?

No such thing is contemplated; and I do not know what his motive is for coupling such a proposition in that resolution, as it can only end in misleading the people of the United States. But this resolution is aimed at something else. It is a deadly weapon pointed at the starving millions in Russia. You can not, under that resolution, appropriate $100,000, or any less sum, to send the offerings from the generous hearts of our people to the suffering millions across the sea.

Mr. HOLMAN. We can send it by our Navy.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. You can not appropriate a dollar that is needed.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not need a dollar.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I want the gentleman to answer in his own time. He has an hour and a half, and I an hour only left on the other side of the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will please excuse me.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I would be glad if we had unlimited time for debate, but there are other gentlemen who want to speak.

I say now, you can not send these offerings across the sea under that resolution without an appropriation. And while on that point, I call the attention of Congress to the fact that the governor of my State (and I mention it with pride, and to his credit) by proclamation appointed one reliable man in each Congressional district to receive the voluntary offerings of the people of Iowa for our suffering fellow mortals across the ocean. The gentleman appointed for my district, a responsible Democrat, telegraphed me as follows:

D. B. HENDERSON, Member of Congress, etc.:

Please urge the passage of Senate resolution authorizing the chartering of a vessel to carry the Russian famine cargo.

A. SLIMMER.

On the same day, January 7, I found myself compelled to send him this answer:

A. SLIMMER, Waverly, Iowa:

Don't know of one Republican who does not favor the Russian resolution. Retrenchment Democratic reformers are killing it.

D. B. HENDERSON.

[Applause.]

And now comes the battery of the father of that side of the House, making another charge against these poor unfortunates over there. I shall not in connection with this resolution stop to discuss the laws or the policies of Russia. Jew and Gentile, while famine, armed with death, is sweeping sixteen provinces, come forward with ready hands and generous hearts to help their fellow mortals. The "reform" Democracy says that the Government shall not take these offerings and carry them to their destination.

But, Mr. Speaker, the burden of this resolution goes in another direction. It emphasizes the declaration of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] in a speech that appeared in the RECORD on Friday morning to the effect that this country is in a deplorable financial condition; and as the gentleman from Missouri put it, that "we are confronted with a deficit."

I desire to call attention to that branch of the proposition involved in this resolution before us. An effort is being studiously made to impress the country with the idea that the Government is in an embarrassed condition, and outside of this Chamber the ghouls and scavangers of the impending political Presidential campaign are taking up announcements made on the floor of this House, enlarging them, and retailing them among the people.

The effort made to show that there is a deficit and that the credit of the country is in peril, coming as it does from the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and emphasized in this resolution by the chairman of that committee, demands attention. If true, it should be known; if false and used for campaign purposes, it should meet the severe condemnation of all honest men.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says:

> The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury shows the net cash balance in the Treasury January 1, 1892, to be $34,574,128.30.

The impression is sought to be conveyed all through the gentleman's speech that this is all the available money that we have in the Treasury. From that he deducts $14,108,000 of subsidiary and minor coin, thus reducing to about $20,000,000 the available cash in the Treasury of the United States.

I beg to call the attention of the gentleman and of the House to the fact that in the very statement to which he refers if he will examine it thoroughly, he will find, that in addition to the $34,000,000 in round numbers, stated by him, there is in the Treasury to the credit of the disbursing officer of the United States money to pay off the appropriations that he says are being neglected and can not be met, to the amount of $27,813,470.82. In addition to that, the same statement shows that we have in the vaults of the Treasury $100,000,000 in gold. So that at the time when the gentleman undertook to impress the country with the idea that we had but $20,000,000 available, the Secretary of the Treasury could draw his checks against $162,387,599.12.

But the gentleman sneers at the $14,000,000 of subsidiary coin and treats it as something not to be thought of in connection with the public debt. That coin is payable on all debts in sums of $5. The gentleman may feel disposed to sneer at that, but let me state a fact or two in this connection. On July 1, 1888, there was in the Treasury of that class of money $26,163,000; on the 1st of January following, January 18, 1889, there was $23,733,000; on January 1, 1890, there was $22,011,000; on January 1, 1891, there was $19,150.000; and on January 1, 1892, there was only $14,108,000. So that since July 1, 1888, there has been a reduction in that class of the assets of the Treasury of $12,055,000. That money, therefore, is an available asset in the Treasury of the United States. These figures demonstrate that fact.

The gentleman sneers also at the Secretary of the Treasury for changing the form of the debt statement, so as to make the subsidiary coin appear as a part of the assets of the Government. When the Secretary adopted, or resumed, that plan, he readopted the plan pursued by the Treasury Department until Mr. Cleveland's administration changed it.

If my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who seems to have such an inquiring and industrious turn of mind, had investigated more carefully, he would have discovered that under his own Democratic administration—I mean Mr. Cleveland's administration—every effort was made to make it appear that there was as little cash in the Treasury as possible, and if he will consult the pet national banks which enjoyed the deposits then distributed among them, further information may be found as to the reasons for making the public-debt statement in the form in which it was made under that Democratic administration.

But I come to another part of the gentleman's speech. He says that the receipts fell short of the expenditures of the Government for the first half of this fiscal year, up to January 1, 1892, in the sum of $273,464.57.

I send to the Clerk's desk a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 9, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of yesterday, I have the honor to state that the ordinary revenues and expenditures of the Government for the six months ending December 31, 1891, were as follows:

Receipts.

From customs	$85,722,341.83
From internal revenue	77,057,281.60
From miscellaneous	11,364,265.88
Total	174,143,889.31

Expenditures.

Civil establishment	49,798,222.13
Military establishment	24,775,572.29
Naval establishment	15,056,076.34
Indian service	6,497,810.71
Pensions	61,350,919.83
Interest on the debt	9,565,379.74
Total	167,043,581.09

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, that letter shows an excess of $7,100,308.22 of receipts over expenditures during the first half of this fiscal year, instead of a shortage of $273,000, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I can not yield now. The gentleman has his own time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have the official statement here——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I have given the official statement of the Secretary.

Mr. DOCKERY. They have omitted the national-bank redemption fund from that statement.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I have given the official statement, and I want to say in passing that this surplus has been applied on the public debt of the Government and to stop interest on the public debt. But, Mr. Speaker, it would be a trifling matter if for a day, a week, a month, or even a series of months, the expenditures did exceed the receipts. Those matters fluctuate. At one time a great amount of receipts pours into the Treasury, and at another time, when the receipts are comparatively light, the heaviest payments have to be made; and that may go on for a considerable time. Nevertheless, the fact is that the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that there was a deficit during the first six months of the current fiscal year is not correct.

Now, I pass to another branch of the gentleman's statement. He stated that the several appropriations for the current fiscal year amounted to $544,000,000 in round numbers. In order to get that amount the gentleman must have added the fifteen and odd million dollars for the direct tax, passed by a preceding Congress, because the debt statement, or rather the statement prepared by the clerks of the two appropriation committees of Congress, states the total of the appropriations at $525,000,000, instead of $544,000,000, as given by the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman must have added the fifteen millions of direct tax, probably two millions for bounties on sugar, and probably two millions for the indefinite bounties appropriated for in the last Congress. But I want to call his attention to a fact which he ought to have known, if he did not, before making this startling announcement to the country—the fact that eleven and a half million dollars of the direct tax was paid to the States before the beginning of the current fiscal year, and of course should not be counted as a part of the liabilities for this year. Such blunders are hard to account for. I hope the gentleman will explain and correct it.

But, Mr. Speaker, why does the gentleman pursue the course that he does here? He takes the total appropriations which, by his own figures, are $544,000,000, cuts that amount in two, and then says that half of that amount should be expended in the first six months of this fiscal year; but he says that only $176,000,000 was expended, and therefore he claims that $35,232,408.75 remain unexpended for the first half of this fiscal year.

What if that were true? What does it amount to? But how does he know that it is true? The $35,000,000 is purely a forced balance on his part. He might just as well have said that one-twelfth of the total appropriations of this year, or $45,000,000, should have been expended in the month of July, or one three-hundred-and-sixty-fifth part of the appropriation, $1,491,000, on the 1st day of July. And while he was so "cute" about the matter, if he had fixed upon the hour before 9 o'clock on the 1st day of July he could have shown the whole appropriation of the current fiscal year unexpended. That matter cuts no figure in this case at all. It will seldom be found that half of the appropriations are paid in the first half of the year for which appropriated. Orders have to be issued, contracts made, and many steps taken by the executing officers before the money can be used.

The gentleman presents, and he gives credit to the "gentlemanly clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations," an estimate that $30,000,000 remained unexpended of last year's approtions when this fiscal year began. I wonder whether my friend from Missouri took time to ask the "gentlemanly clerk of the Committee on Appropriations" what the custom or practice was, or what the conditions were in that respect in other years. I suppose he was not hunting for such information. But if he had asked the question, or if he had investigated the matter for himself, he would have learned that from twenty-five to thirty million dollars have for years remained unexpended at the end of every fiscal year.

Why, Mr. Speaker, no Executive or Administration has ever spent within the fiscal year the appropriations for that year, and no Administration could do so lawfully if it tried. Take all the appropriations for public works, what are called continuous appropriations, like those for rivers and harbors, forts and fortifications, vessels for the Navy, light-houses, and for public buildings. I have here a letter from the Supervising Architect, which I will incorporate in my remarks, showing that the expenditures for public buildings run on an average for three years and a half. The work in such cases can not be commenced until the appropriation fixing the limit is made; and sometimes from 12 to 35 per cent of the appropriation is not expended for two years. And, as this letter shows, for the first half of the fiscal year less than 1 per cent is expended.

After the title to the ground has been obtained, authority must be had by State legislation; contracts must be made, etc. Appropriations for all public works—the building of war vessels, the construction of light-houses and fortifications, all classes of continuous appropriations—must ex necessitate run farther into other years than that to which the appropriation originally applies. Yet the gentleman would mass these appropriations of $30,000,000 unexpended as an evidence that this Administration has not been able to pay its debts when due.

What is the object of the covering-in act, so well known to the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations? It is to provide as to appropriations which are not continuous—not vested, so to speak—any surplus remaining unexpended after two years, shall be covered into the Treasury. Within the last ten years $92,000,000 of appropriations which had remained unexpended for two years, and had thus come within the terms of the covering-in act, have been covered back into the Treasury.

Hence it is not wonderful; there are reasons for the fact that appropriations should remain unexpended; and why a gentleman of the intelligence of the gentleman from Missouri, with these facts lying before his face, should seek to make it appear that this Administration has been holding back money due, and not coming up to meet the demands of the country as appropriated for, is more than I can understand. I hope the gentleman will explain this matter in the time allowed to the other side of the House.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1892.

SIR: In response to your oral request in regard to the proportion of expenditures made each year as related to the appropriations on account of public buildings under the control of this office, I have the honor to submit the inclosed tables.

It is but proper to state in this connection that appropriations for public buildings are what are known as permanent or continuous, and not subject to the limitation of any fiscal year. Consequently the percentage of expenditure for any year can not be absolutely determined without much time and labor. The method adopted, however, in the statements is one which closely and fairly approximates the information desired.

The statements are confined to new buildings authorized by the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses, as the preparation of a statement covering transactions relating to buildings authorized prior to that period would require a longer time in preparation than is thought to be your wish.

As the question will naturally arise why so large appropriations are made when but a small percentage is expended, the answer must be that while the actual money may not be needed, no contract under the statutes can be entered into which contemplates any expenditure in excess of the amount on the books of the Treasury shown as available for a designated building.

It is estimated that the average time during which buildings are in course of construction is about three and one-half years. This, however, as can readily be understood, would be largely affected by the preponderance of large or small structures, and also by delays which frequently arise in securing the site and the necessary State legislation ceding jurisdiction over the same, which must be done before the work can be commenced on the sketch plans to be approved in accordance with law.

I trust that the information given may be what you desire, and have the honor to remain,

Respectfully yours,

W. J. EDBROOKE,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives.

Buildings authorized, first session Fiftieth Congress.

Statement of appropriations and expenditures on account of construction of new public buildings and extensions authorized at the first session Fiftieth Congress.

Total amount appropriated first and second sessions	$6,468,659.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1889	723,685.29
Say 12 per cent of the appropriations.
Total amount appropriations as above	6,468,659.00
Add appropriations on account of designated buildings, first session Fifty-first Congress	119 500.00
	6,588,159.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1890	1,091,681.56
Say 17 per cent of the appropriations.
Total amount appropriations as above	6,588,159.00
Add appropriations on account of designated buildings, second session Fifty-first Congress	380,000.00
Total amount appropriated at close of second session Fifty-first Congress, for new buildings authorized by the first session Fiftieth Congress	6,968,159.00
Say 35 per cent of the appropriations made.

Buildings authorized, second session Fiftieth Congress.

Statement of appropriations and expenditures on account of construction of new public buildings and extensions authorized at the second session Fiftieth Congress.

Total appropriations	$1,875,000.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1889	378.72
Total amount appropriated as above	1,875,000.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1890	498,763.88
Say 22 per cent of the appropriations made.
Total amount appropriated as above to close of the second session Fifty-First Congress for buildings authorized by the second session Fiftieth Congress	1,875,000.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1891	844,023.68
Say 45 per cent of the appropriations made.

Buildings authorized first session Fifty-first Congress.

Statement of appropriations and expenditures on account of construction of new public buildings and extensions authorized at the first session Fifty-first Congress.

	3,070,000.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1891	481,213.49
Say 16 per cent of the appropriations made.

Buildings authorized, second session Fifty-first Congress.

Statement of appropriations and expenditures on account of construction of new public buildings and extensions authorized at the second session Fifty-first Congress.

Total appropriations	$4,170,000.00
On account of these appropriations there was expended to September 30, 1891	22,616.69
Say .54, less than 1 per cent.*

*The reason for this small percentage is, as must readily be understood, because much time will elapse after the appropriations are made before any payment is made on account of purchase of site, and this must necessarily prevail in nearly all cases in connection with public buildings, the law requiring that the site must be paid for before actual work.

Now, the gentleman treats the $35,000,000 which he says has not been spent during the first half of the fiscal year as a load hanging over the head of the Government. He treats in this way the $30,000,000 which had not been spent at the end of the last fiscal year, but every dollar of which, so far as he knows, may have been paid out during the first six months of this year. Undoubtedly a large part of it has been paid out, and it is no longer this incubus that the gentleman would point out as hanging over this little sum of $20,000,000 which he says is in the Treasury. A large part of this sum has undoubtedly been paid during these six months; but the gentleman does not say anything about that. He takes the amount of thirty million and this forced balance of thirty-five million, a pure fiction, making $65,000,000, and treats this as a liability hanging over and waiting to swoop down upon the little twenty millions which he represents as being all that is left in the Treasury.

But he does not stop there. He speaks of the refunding of the twenty-five millions of 4½ per cent Government bonds. He says that we have been forced into this refund, that we had to shove over this liability. He says those bonds were refunded at 2 per cent, as though that were a crime. I will publish with my remarks a table showing the saving to the Government from that refunding operation. The Government did not make the bondholders come in and consent to a refund. The Government said, "You can take your cash or you can have your bonds refunded at 2 per cent." That is not a very heavy paying rate of interest. It will tend still further, as did Mr. Windom's great financial policy in the past, to bring down the rate of interest to the poor men, the borrowers of this Republic. Besides it was demanded by the business interests of the country when failures in Europe were shaking the commercial centers of the world.

Those obligations stand there, not payable at the option of the bondholder. When the sun shall have risen and set ten thousand times ten thousand times the bondholders will not have the right to present any of those bonds for payment. The option is with the Government alone. Was it wisdom on the part of the Government to refund those bonds at 2 per cent and enable us to address ourselves to paying off the 4 and 4½ per cent bonds, as I shall presently show we did? Was that a safe financial policy? But my friend from Missouri takes the $25,000,000 of refunded bonds, adds to that $30,000,000, which has been mostly paid out, and $35,000,000 of a forced balance and a dream of his original brain, thus piling up $90,000,000, which he represents as waiting to swallow up the little "$20,000,000" left in the Treasury.

But he did not stop there. He says that the sinking fund is in default; that the $49,000,000 due annually to the sinking fund is in default. He found out a day or two after he made that speech that he was "clean off" on that particular proposition, and the other morning he tried to get in under the plea of correcting the RECORD, so as to change his speech and figures. I signified my entire willingness to have him do that if he would correct his whole speech, or if he would give an hour each to himself and myself to discuss his speech in detail.

Some friend would not allow that, although my friend from Missouri, I will give him credit, seemed willing to go into it. But he found, when he made that false statement to the country, that this Administration was in default to the sinking fund in the sum of $49,000,000. And yet the report of the Secretary of the Treasury showed him that on the 1st of November, I think it was, $20,000,000 of it had been in fact paid off. Since then, if the gentleman will inquire, he will find that up to the 5th of January $23,000,000 had been paid, and the Secretary shows in his report that all but a little over $10,000,000 of it has been provided for.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman yield to me for an interruption just there in regard to that payment?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I can not be interrupted now. After I get through I will answer the gentleman any question he wants to ask. You know I have not the time, and I will answer any question in your time when you reply.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. We have paid off, as I shall presently show, by this Administration, that is leading the country into eternal smash and universal bankruptcy, according to the gentleman, with all of our other embarrasments, over $259,000,000 of the interest-bearing debt of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] Not a bondholder wanted his money, but this Administration made them walk up to the cashier's office and take their money, and without counting the refunding of $25,000,000 at 2 per cent, this Administration has saved the people of this country $55,000,000 by that operation alone. This statement from the Treasury Department will explain in detail:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1892.

To Hon. D. B. HENDERSON:

The saving of interest effected by the redemption of $259,093,650 of the debt since March 1, 1889, is $55,352,493.51, exclusive of the 2 per cent per annum saved on $25,364,500 four-and-a-halfs refunded. I send you statement by messenger.

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

JANUARY 11, 1892.

Changes in the interest-bearing debt of the United States since March 1, 1889, and the saving of interest thereon.

	Four per cent.	Four and one-half per cent.	Total.
Principal	$121,615,950.00	$137,477,700.00	$259,093,650.00
Cost	152,958,818.83	143,358,112.37	296,316,931.20
Cost at maturity	206,555,288.50	145,114,136.21	351,669,424.71
Saving	53,596,469.67	1,756,023.84	55,352,493.51

In addition to the above purchases and redemption the amount of $25,364,500 of 4½ per cent bonds was continued at 2 per cent.

Reduction of annual interest charge.

On 4 percents on account of purchases	$4,864,638.00
On 4½ percents on account of purchases and redemptions	6,186,496.50
On 4½ percents on account of continuance at 2 per cent	634,112.50
Total interest saved by refunding	11,685,247.00

Now, sir, following out this line of thought a little further, the demands of the sinking fund are annually about forty-eight or forty-nine millions of dollars. We will say $50,000,000 so as to fix it easily in the mind and be safe. On the 4th day of next March this "careless Administration" will have been in power and control of the Government for three years. That would require it to pay, under the law, one hundred and fifty millions of the public debt. But what has it done? It has paid off two hundred and fifty-nine millions of the public debt. So that instead of the sinking fund being in default under this Administration, it is well up in the neighborhood of $109,000,000 ahead of its liabilities on that account. Has that the ring of a "deficit?"

And yet, with these facts staring the gentleman from Missouri in the face like fixed bayonets, he stands up in his place on this floor and hurls to the country a statement that the sinking fund is in default. But he did not stop even there. He takes his $30,000,000, to which I have referred, and the $35,000,000 of forced balance, his $25,000,000 of refunded bonds at 2 per cent, and the $49,000,000 of the sinking fund "in default," and rears a pyramid of $140,000,000 of impending and pressing liabilities of this Government, hunting for satisfaction out of a little poor paltry pool of $20,000,000. He has been compelled to seek an opportunity to correct his $49,000,000 mistake as to the sinking fund, and his $35,000,000 is equally shadowy and unworthy of consideration. The $30,000,000 of unpaid obligations has been largely paid off and the rest not due, and is nothing for criticism, it being in the usual course of the Government, while the $25,000,000 can never be demanded, so that the $140,000,000 of deficiencies is hanging in midair and his $20,000,000 rises to the dignity of a solid $162,387,599.12, waiting for the Democratic party to trot out something else to pay it out for.

Ah, but another crime has been added by this Administration to the catalogue. He says that this Administration has ravaged—no, wrested—the same thing—[laughter] from the holders of national-bank notes $54,207,955.75 and covered it into the Treasury we are so hard pushed. When was that done? Under the act of July 14, 1890, known as the silver act. Was there a man in any of the one, two, three, or four political parties—does that take you in, Brother SIMPSON—who objected to that? The $54,000,000 had accumulated as a fund to pay off the bills of the retired national banks when presented. It had been piling up for years in the Treasury, and contracting the currency among the people.

Everybody, as I remember, thought it was statesmanship to set that $54,000,000 at work among the people, and I do not remember of any criticism. There may have been from some quarters, for you can always find a little criticism on everything, no matter how good. But my recollection is that we all agreed on both sides, and acquiesced in the wisdom of taking that $54,000,000 and putting it afloat. But the gentleman says we have "wrested" it from the note-holders. Has he ever heard of any holder of a note who presented it and did not get his money for it? It was a liability against this Government before the act of July 14, 1890. It is a liability against the Government since. There is nobody that differs as to the liability. The only difference is that before that act it was idle, and since that act it has been working for the people of the United States. Come on, my Democratic brother from Missouri, with more assaults showing like this the wisdom of this Administration and the billion-dollar Congress that you so sneeringly refer to.

I presume you were one of those who assailed us for having "$400,000,000 in the Treasury that ought to be among the people." It is there now, excepting a wholesome balance to meet current expenses, and you are whining just as much. What will satisfy you? Here is his summing up of the situation:

The condition of the Treasury, Mr. Speaker, may be briefly summarized in the statement that the available surplus is now but $20,465,142.95.

I have shown from the Treasury statement for the first of this month available funds in the Treasury amounting to $162,387,599.12.

He says further:

Current expenditures surpass current revenues.

I have had read the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury showing that for the six months discussed the excess of receipts over expenditures was $7,100,000.

He says further:

Appropriations aggregating $65,488,156 are unpaid.

A forced balance, false and misleading, as I have explained in detail.

He further says:

The Administration has been constrained to ask an extension upon $25,364,500 of the bonded indebtedness.

Indicating that we could not pay off the $25,000,000 of bonds. Since President Harrison took the helm of state he has paid off of the interest-bearing debt $259,079,250. That is not all. On June 30, 1891, we had a surplus of the receipts over the expenditures of that year of $37,239,762.57. We took that surplus and with other funds in the Treasury paid off at the end of the last fiscal year $134,947,635.48. Does that look like an embarrassed Administration?

That is not all. After doing that, on July 1, 1891, we had a cash balance in the Treasury available to the Secretary's check, of $153,893,808.83. Honestly, Brother DOCKERY, does not the situation look better than you said?

But he says that we have been cut short of revenues because of "restrictive tariff duties." I do not know what will satisfy these gentlemen. I will incorporate in my remarks a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury showing the total receipts for the fifteen months ending with the commencement of this month, as compared with the fifteen months preceding, showing the operations of the so-called McKinley bill and prior thereto; a total falling off since the McKinley bill went into effect of $58,000,000, just about enough to equal the free sugar that we laid on the tables of the people of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] Damn us for that if you will. We will take our chances before the people on that issue.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 9, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your communication of this date I have the honor to inform you that the receipts from customs for the first six months of the years 1890, 1891, and 1892 were as follows:

First six months fiscal year—
1892	$85,722,341.83
1891	124,240,195.51
1890	109,629,333.03

I have also to inform you that the receipts from customs from October 1, 1889, to December 31, 1890, and from October 1, 1890, to December 31, 1891, were as follows:

October 1, 1889, to December 31, 1890	$295,634,083.04
October 1, 1890, to December 31, 1891	237,270,639.97

Respectfully yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 11, 1892.

HON. D. B. HENDERSON:

It may be proper to state in connection with the statement furnished you on Saturday, of the receipts from customs for first fifteen months under the McKinley bill, that while the new tariff went into effect in October, 1890, goods were permitted to be withdrawn from warehouse until February 1 following at the old rates of duty, and that sugar came in free only on and after April 1.

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] speaks at considerable length about the billion-dollar Congress, and it is not original with the gentleman from Missouri. I will say it to his credit. We have heard of it before.

Mr. SIMPSON. You will hear of it again.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Yes; the liars are not all dead. We never have had a billion-dollar Congress in this country. Many of the stump speakers in the Democratic party who have howled about the billion-dollar Congress thought that we were appropriating a billion dollars every year. And many of them never read a single appropriation bill that passed through any Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Many of them could not read. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. That hope is what you relied on, I suppose. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of this body to a few facts on that head.

The total regular annual and permanent appropriations for the Forty-ninth Congress were $746,342,495.51; for the Fiftieth Congress, $817,963,859.80; increase of the Fiftieth over the Forty-ninth Congress, $71,621,364.29. But the Fiftieth Congress appropriated for pensions, more than the Forty-ninth, the sum of $9,789,700; so that in the Fiftieth Congress there was a net increase over the Forty-ninth, for the ordinary appropriations of the Government, of $61,831,664.29. That shows that in two Democratic Congresses you have the proof that this is a growing Republic, and one which is growing fast. And the question is not how much was appropriated, but was it wisely appropriated, and did we have the money?

Now let us look at the Fifty-first Congress as compared with the Fiftieth. The total regular annual and permanent appropriations of the Fifty-first Congress were $988,417,183.34. Increase in appropriations for pensions by the Fifty-first Congress over the Fiftieth, $113,312,351.69. Deducting the pensions as in comparison with the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth, and the net increase for ordinary expenses of the Fifty-first Congress over the Fiftieth was $57,140,971.85 as against an increase in the Fiftieth Congress over the Forty-ninth of $61,831,664.29. This table will give it in detail.

Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Forty-ninth Congress	$746,342,495.51
Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Fiftieth Congress	817,963,859.80
Increase Fiftieth over Forty-ninth Congress		71,621,364.29
Increase in appropriations for pensions by Fiftieth over Forty-ninth Congress		9,789,700.00
Net increase for ordinary expenses		61,831,664.29

Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Fifty-first Congress	988,417,183.34
Increase Fifty-first over Fiftieth Congress		170,453,323.54
Increase in appropriations for pensions by Fifty-first over Fiftieth Congress		113,312,351.69
Net increase for ordinary expenses		57,140,971.85

Now, Mr. Speaker, all of this cry about the "billion-dollar Congress" simply means this, that we gave that $113,000,000, by legislation, appropriation, and payment, to the soldiers of the Republic, their widows, children, and dependent parents. Some of our opponents are courageous enough to admit it, but some will fight it under cover. I was reading in a paper published in Kentucky, the other day, the correspondence from a gentleman of this city to his paper, the Courier-Journal. He came out like a man in the open field and charged it upon the pension appropriations. That is the kind of a fellow that I like. I like your Stonewall Jacksons, but not your bushwhackers, gentlemen. And we have in all parties and in all countries the brave Jacksons and the cowardly bushwhackers and assassins.

If we are to be arraigned for the pensions appropriations, making what is termed the billion-dollar Congress, come out like men and say it, and we will know where we stand and what we are fighting. But even there I should remark in passing that in the Fifty-first Congress we found awaiting us a deficiency on pensions of $25,000,000 that should have been appropriated for by the last preceding Congress that we had to meet, and it is added to the burden charged against the so-called billion-dollar Congress. It should be charged, however, to the Fiftieth and credited to the Fifty-first. We had the Eleventh Census on our hands. The operation of the law brought to us at that time the necessity to appropriate money for artificial limbs to crippled soldiers.

We gave an increase, and had to, as an honest Congress, to meet the requirements of the new pension legislation, by increasing the force of the Pension Office. We found contracts for building war vessels made by the previous Congresses and Administrations, calling for over $7,000,000 increase. We appropriated it, and thus met the obligations lying at our doors. Former Congresses provided sites for fortifications and we finished. Sacred treaties made with Indian tribes brought additional burdens to us, but we met them, and the opening homesteads of our people commend our action. We met a popular and patriotic demand among the people and provided for the great World's Fair. There was a high duty before the Fifty-first Congress and it met it manfully and economically.

We met with courage and wisdom the necessary demands of the Republic. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and we stand to-day, during the time arraigned by the gentleman from Missouri, and in the face of the present moment, having paid every obligation. No dollar has been demanded and refused under any appropriation of the last Congress, or any preceding one, and there is money in the Treasury and in the coming revenues to meet every dollar. I challenge any human being living to show that this Administration has ordered any disbursing officer or any financial agent of the Government, or anyone who controls the financies, to withhold payments under any contract or appropriation of the Government. We have met every dollar; we have kept faith with the defenders of the Government; we have kept faith with the Government creditors; we increased the currency in "the billion-dollar Congress," and there is no aristocracy or democracy in that currency. It is all good, and stands on an equality before every man who receives it.

In compliance with public demands and Republican pledges, we revised the tariff and reduced the income of the Government; but, Mr. Speaker, in doing it we increased the price of the product of the farmer, made it certain that the laborer would get just and true compensation, and made it utterly impossible for starvation to enter the Republic and dwell under the folds of the American flag.

We have done all this with courage and modesty; but we have found at every step, true to its past record but false to its country, the Democratic party fighting us at every step, and all this we have done in the face of falsehoods unequaled in the history of the country.

I now yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], will now take the floor. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COVERT in the chair). The gentleman from Iowa has three minutes of his hour.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then we have an hour and three minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from Indiana would now take the floor, and yield it for the next hour. I reserve, of course, the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be recognized in his own time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to use it at this time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized in my own time, for the remainder of the hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri will be recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, whilst I have prepared no "set speech" for this occasion, I shall briefly review some of the statements which have just been made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] in respect to the condition of the public Treasury on the first day of the present year. The amount of the appropriations of the last Congress, accurately and justly characterized as "the billion-dollar Congress," is without parallel or precedent in the history of the country. The attention of the people has been so frequently called to this stupendous aggregate that the whole country familiarly recognizes the Fifty-first Congress as the "billion-dollar Congress." I sincerely hope, sir, that no such stigma will attach to this Congress, which is just now entering upon the threshold of its labors. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, if I had not made a careful examination of our fiscal affairs, I should, perhaps, feel constrained, in view of what has just fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], to apologize to the Republican party for the recent exhibit I presented of the Treasury situation.

But, sir, no speech, however able or plausible, can coerce the total liabilities imposed by that Congress, including, as they do, the direct tax bill, estimates for back pay and bounty, and permanent appropriations, as now estimated by the Treasury Department below the aggregate of $1,011,016,280.34, as against $817,963,859.80 for the preceding Congress, which was Democratic in the House only, the increase being $193,052,420.54.

WHERE THE MONEY WENT.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the record shows, and I challenge denial of its accuracy, that after deducting from the appropriations of the Fifty-first Congress, the requirements of the sinking fund, as now estimated, the interest on the public debt, and the liabilities on account of pensions, which may be properly regarded as an extraordinary charge, thus giving the Republican party credit for these three items of expenditure, there still remains, on the same basis of comparison, an increase of $103,312,129.75 by the billion-dollar Congress over the preceding Congress for all the other expenses of the Government.

And yet, sir, the gentleman from Iowa offers as the only explanation of the tremendous aggregate of appropriations of the last Congress, the increase of one hundred and thirteen millions on account of pension expenditures. The pension expenditures of the Fiftieth Congress were $175,017,400, whilst those of the Fifty-first Congress amounted to $288,329,751.69, or an increase of $113,312,351.69. The explanation of the gentleman from Iowa is incorrect. I have stated, and now reiterate the statement, that upon the same comparative basis, after deducting the sinking fund, the interest on the public debt, and the appropriations for pensions, the increase on account of the remaining expenditures of the Government involves the appalling aggregate of $103,312,129.75!

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to consider briefly another phase of the pension situation. Under laws enacted prior to the last Congress pension expenditures were steadily increasing. For example, the excess of such expenditures for the fiscal year 1889 over those of 1888 was $7,336,270.34; of 1890 over 1889, $19,312,075.96; whilst, notwithstanding the enactment of the Morrill disability bill, approved June 27, 1890, and at that time estimated to involve an additional annual expenditure with a range from thirty to fifty millions of dollars, the Treasury statement shows that the pension expenditures for the fiscal year 1891 were but $124,415,951.40, being only $17,479,096.33 more than the year prior to the enactment of the Morrill law.

The situation derives further illustration and emphasis from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1891, wherein he estimates that the entire pension expenditure during the current year will be but $125,000,000 or $10,214,785 less than the appropriation, such expenditure being substantially the same as that made during the last fiscal year. Not only is this true, Mr. Speaker, but investigation further discloses that, although the appropriations for the present year are $7,421,725.66 in excess of those of last year, the expenditures for the first half of the current fiscal year are $7,660,742.94 less than for the corresponding period of last year. In other words, it would seem that the enactment of the Morrill disability bill had not benefited the soldiers to the extent it was represented to them it would at the time of its passage, or else the disproportionate increase of expenditure may result from inactivity or partiality in the adjudication of pension claims. The latter dilemma may possibly find its solution in the condition of the public Treasury.

Upon this point I can not, however, speak definitely; still, if it be true that pension claims are fairly and properly adjudicated, it becomes obvious that there was a misunderstanding somewhere as to the effect of the Morrill bill upon pension expenditures. In this connection I deem it proper to invite the attention of the House to the fact that Congress was swift to respond to the demand of the Commissioner of Pensions for adequate clerical aid to enforce the provisions of the Morrill disability bill. The force in the Pension Office was increased 455, and in the Record and Pension Division of the War Department 168, making a total addition to the salaried list of 623 employés, at an annual cost of $666,620; but, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this reinforcement of the clerical strength of the Pension Office, at an annual outlay of more than a half million of dollars, this Administration estimates that the expenditures of the present year will not surpass those of the last fiscal year, whilst, at the same time, more than $10,000,000 of current appropriations will remain unexpended. [Applause.]

This situation, Mr. Speaker, of increased appropriations and diminished expenditures, with new pension legislation involving additional liabilities upon the Treasury, and yet but little additional expenditure, is unlike anything hitherto known in the fiscal history of our country. And now, Mr. Speaker, having made this analysis of the appropriations of the last Congress, it becomes unnecessary to say that the attempt by the gentleman from Iowa to explain their enormous aggregate as the result of increased pension appropriations is utterly futile and wholly fails. The $103,000,000 of increase, exclusive of pensions, sinking fund, and interest on the public debt have gone in the direct-tax bill, in increased salaries, in new offices, in subsidy bills, in bounty bills, in the French spoliation claims, and into other channels, where I fear too often private interests have been subserved under the pretense of promoting the general welfare.

THEN AND NOW.

Mr. Speaker, I desire now briefly to refer to the condition of the Treasury on July 1, 1890, when the appropriations of the billion-dollar Congress began to dissipate the Treasury surplus. At that time the surplus in the Treasury on the present basis of estimating such surplus (except as to the $100,000,000 gold reserve), and including the national bank redemption fund covered into the Treasury shortly thereafter, amounted to $144,201,079.95. The "net cash balance" on the first of the present month was but $34,574,128.30, thus showing a net cash loss of $109,626,951.65.

The gentleman from Iowa had much to say of the employment of revenues in the purchase of Government bonds, and of the consequent reduction of the surplus thereby. Allowing the Republican party full credit for the $64,745,604.51 of surplus revenues used in the purchase of Government bonds, it is still apparent that $44,881,347.14 of the surplus vanished during the period stated, as a result of the lavish appropriations of the billion-dollar Congress.

Now a word, Mr. Speaker, in passing, with reference to the present surplus. Something was said by the gentleman from Iowa in respect to the money deposited in national banks under the last Administration; and if I understood him aright he stated that the purpose of the Cleveland Administration was to deposit the public money in national banks so as to show as small a surplus as practicable. I may be permitted to say in response that no such charge has been made or can be successfully maintained against this Administration, inasmuch as it has been constrained to gather into the general Treasury all its "chips and whetstones" together with trust and reserve funds, so that the surplus might appear as large as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa, in estimating the surplus in the Treasury against which the Secretary could draw his check for current expenditures, includes the $100,000,000 of gold reserve, which has heretofore been held as a trust fund for the redemption of greenbacks. The position of the gentleman in this respect is in entire accord with the views of the present Secretary of the Treasury, as appears from an interview with that official published in the Evening Star of this city on the 29th of April last. Its accuracy has to my knowledge never been challenged, although it has been made the subject of comment by the press of the country. I will now send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A Star reporter had a talk to-day with Secretary Foster relating to the statement made by Director of the Mint Leech concerning the state of the finances of the Government.

In this statement, it will be remembered, Mr. Leech held that the Government had a surplus, or available cash balance, of some $250,000,000, and to make this amount he counted in the so-called gold reserve of $100,000,000 and about $34,000,000 of silver, which was purchased by the issuance of legal-tender coin certificates.

In speaking of this the Secretary said in substance:

"I saw Mr. Leech's first statement and said he might give it out. I did not see the second before it was printed."

"Do you agree with him?"

"I guess he is about right in the main. I think it is a matter that may well be discussed. I should have stated it a little differently if I had been writing it myself. I should have said that some of the $250,000,000 of available cash might be regarded as trust funds—might be, I say. It would be correct to say that about seventy millions is unquestionably available cash—that is, about twenty-eight millions in the banks, twenty-one millions of subsidiary coin four millions in trade-dollar bullion, twelve millions of current cash, and five millions in silver against which no certificates have been issued.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

"As to the $100,000,000 of gold reserve, it is held against the $350,000,000 greenbacks to make the credit of the Government impregnable, for no one would be able to get together enough greenbacks to take all the gold out of the Treasury, and therefore they do not take any. But these notes outstanding are legal tender and the Government can and would use this gold reserve if it needed to in a pinch. It should, therefore, appear in the debt statement as available cash."

Mr. Speaker, from this interview it appears that the Secretary holds to the view that "these notes outstanding are legal tender, and the Government can and would use this gold reserve if it needed to in a pinch. It should, therefore, appear in the debt statement as available cash." I do not care to enter upon a discussion of the right of the Secretary to use this fund in a "pinch" further than to say that it is manifest that if it can be lawfully used in a "pinch" it can be used in the absence of a "pinch;" and as it is probable that a "pinch" will in the near future confront the Treasury, it is obvious that as a logical sequence it will be used to meet current expenditures.

Mr. FORNEY. In the exhibit which you submitted of the cash in the Treasury on the 1st of July, 1890, and on the 1st of the present month, did you include the one hundred millions of gold reserve?

Mr. DOCKERY. I have not included the gold reserve for the reason that whatever may be the correct interpretation as to the right to employ it for current expenditures, it has been hitherto held in the public mind as a trust fund for the redemption of outstanding greenbacks. I may say to my friend, however, that it is now carried by the Secretary in the cash balance of the Treasury, and will be used in the event of a "pinch" to prevent an actual Treasury deficiency. In this connection I would add that the gentleman from Iowa quoted me as saying that "we are confronted with a deficit." The statement is not quite accurate, as my remark was that "an actual Treasury deficiency is apparently imminent and inevitable."

But, Mr. Speaker, this expression of apprehension upon my part was based upon a fiscal exhibit which entirely precluded the use of the one hundred millions of gold reserve. It is of course possible for this Republican Administration to postpone indefinitely the appearance of a Treasury deficiency by the use of trust and reserve funds; by securing an extension upon matured obligations, and by defaulting in the requirements of the sinking fund. Indeed, a Treasury deficiency would now be an accomplished fact, Mr. Speaker, but for the employment of the gold reserve as a part of the available cash balance; the covering of the fifty-four millions belonging to the holders of national-bank notes into the general Treasury and the extension of twenty-five millions of the bonded debt which matured in September last.

OUTSTANLING LIABILITIES.

I desire, sir, to submit just here a tabular statement showing the outstanding liabilities of the Treasury on account of the items stated on the first day of the present year. This exhibit of the floating indebtedness includes the 4½ per cent bonds refunded by the Treasury:

Estimated outstanding floating indebtedness January 1, 1892.

Unexpended appropriations, fiscal year 1891 (as estimated by the clerk of the House Appropriations Committee)	$30,256,177.80
Unexpended appropriations first half 1892	37,311,620.39
Total unexpended appropriations	67,567,798.19
Four and one-half per cent bonds refunded	25,364,500.00
Matured debt on which interest has ceased	4,633,340.26
National-bank redemption fund	32,679,299.25
Total outstanding floating indebtedness	130,244,937.70

Mr. Speaker, the amount of unexpended appropriations estimated for the first half of the present fiscal year is a little in excess of the estimate recently submitted, for the reason that I find that the Treasury officials have revised their estimates, and that instead of submitting $122,486,808 as the amount of permanent appropriations for the current year, as they did one year ago, they now estimate that this expenditure will be $127,567,905. I therefore include in the total permanent appropriations for the fiscal year the additional amount of $5,081,097 carried in the supplemental estimate of the Treasury Department. It will be observed that this exhibit is entirely exclusive of the operations of the sinking fund. It is, however, apparent that the Secretary will fail to meet the requirements of that fund to the extent of $10,747,362, as will appear from the reading of that part of his report for 1891, pages 8 and 10, referring to the sinking fund.

The Secretary in his report gives a statement of the probable condition of the Treasury at the close of business on the 30th of June next, which discloses his purpose to provide for only $38,165,663 of this fund. I am not quite sure that I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], but if I did, he stated that the remainder of the sinking fund would not be provided for. I do not see the gentleman from Iowa in his seat, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] can doubtless speak with authority and give us the exact intention of the Secretary in respect to this question, as I desire to use the information in another connection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I will answer the gentleman. Twenty-three million dollars was paid up to January 1, 1892, and all but $10,000,000 is now provided for.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; but, speaking for the Secretary of the Treasury, do you say that he will provide for the $10,000,000?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I assume to speak for nobody, except as to what has been done. I do say, however, that the Secretary can do it if he wants to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but I desire to know his purpose, since it becomes material in connection with another calculation.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I simply give you the statement of the Secretary as to what he had paid and provided for.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have the statement here. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury is not prohibited from providing the additional $10,747,362, but a fair construction of the statements which appear on pages 8 and 10 of his report makes it obvious that he does not intend to provide for the additional $10,747,362 required by the sinking fund for this fiscal year. This seems to be the only reasonable interpretation to be put upon his language.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. No; he has provided for all but $10,000,000; and $23,000,000 has been paid to January 1.

Mr. SAYERS. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has already provided for all of the sinking fund except $10,747,362?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I do.

Mr. SAYERS. Now let us see whether that is so or not. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me I will read the exact language of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have the accurate figures here; but I am quite willing that the gentleman from Texas shall state the language of the Secretary.

Mr. SAYERS. The Secretary of the Treasury, on page 10 of his last report, says:

> The requirements of the sinking fund for the current fiscal year are estimated at $48,913,025. The applications to the fund to November 1, 1891, consisted of bonds, interest notes, and fractional currency amounting to $20,911,163.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to this further language of the Secretary:

> The additional application of similar items of indebtedness during the remainder of the year, and of national-bank notes redeemed under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, in excess of deposits received during the year for the redemption of such notes—

Now, mark what amount of these notes is to come into the Treasury—> estimated at $4,254,500 and $13,000,000 respectively, will bring the total amount to be applied to the fund to within $10,747,362 of the estimated requirement.

In other words, up to November 1, 1891, he had received for the sinking fund of bonds, interest notes, and fractional currency only $20,911,163, leaving over $27,000,000 to be provided for.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Texas, as I understand from that language taken in connection with the items which appear on page 8, that the Secretary does not propose to make an entire default in the sinking fund during this fiscal year. In other words, he proposes to provide for about three-fourths of the liability and default as to the balance.

THE VANISHING SURPLUS.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to advert briefly to certain facts which, in my judgment, warrant me in reiterating the statement of last week, that the Treasury surplus is in a vanishing condition, and that the officials of the Treasury have been constrained to become earnest advocates of the Democratic doctrine of retrenchment and reform, whilst at the same time they have taxed their ingenuity to prevent an actual Treasury deficiency. The first evidence of a Treasury depletion is the fact that expenditures have exceeded revenues for the first half of the present fiscal year in the sum of $273,464.57. This is the first time, as I now recall, that expenditures have exceeded revenues since the period immediately succeeding the civil war.

The gentleman from Iowa, in the statement just made to the House, insists that I am in error upon this point, and offers in support of his position a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury of the 9th instant, giving a statement of the "ordinary" revenues and expenditures of the Government for the period in question, from which it appears, as I now remember, that the "ordinary" receipts of the Government were about one hundred and seventy-four millions and its "ordinary" expenditures only one hundred and sixty-seven millions, or an excess of receipts over expenditures of about seven millions. The gentleman from Iowa declined to be interrupted when this letter of the Acting Secretary was being read, but I then challenged his attention to the fact that it entirely omitted the receipts and expenditures on account of national-bank notes. Upon what ground the Acting Secretary fails to include this item as an "ordinary" expenditure I am unable to say, unless it be that the whole proceeding of wresting the national-bank redemption fund from its position as a trust fund, and covering it into the general Treasury, was a proceeding most extraordinary.

Section 6 of the act approved July 14, 1890, providing that this national-bank redemption fund shall be covered into the general Treasury, declares:

That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the Treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption.

The terms of this section are so plain as to put beyond controversy the methods of procedure. The law declares that the deposits "shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt," and further commands that thereafter "the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury" these notes. It therefore follows, Mr. Speaker, that the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, whilst it may be held to be technically accurate as to the amount stated, yet, as a matter of fact, it fails to reveal the whole truth. It does not give a complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the period in question. I assert this to be true, and offer in support of this position the following exhibit, which I received from the Treasury Department. It speaks for itself, and I quote it as I received it, although it includes some matters foreign to this discussion. It is as follows:

[Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Warrants, Estimates, and Appropriations. Form 109.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WARRANT DIVISION,
January 2, 1892.

An examination of the second column of this exhibit, Mr. Speaker, verifies the absolute accuracy of the statement I made upon a former occasion, when I declared that the expenditures of the Government for the first half of the present fiscal year were $273,464.57 in excess of its revenues.

It will be further observed that, according to this table (Form 109) the "ordinary" expenditures are designated to be those for the civil, military, and naval establishments, miscellaneous, and Indian service. In the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, however, he adds to this classification the interest on the public debt and pensions, whilst excluding, as I have heretofore stated, the expenditures on account of the redemption of national-bank notes. If Form 109 has been changed by the Acting Secretary, it might be well for him to explain when and for what reason pensions and interest came to be classed as "ordinary," and the national-bank notes excluded from this designation.

But, Mr. Speaker, further comment is unnecessary, inasmuch as the exclusion of this item would seem to make a surplus of receipts for the half year rather than a deficiency.

A second fact which I offer in support of my position is found in the legislation of the last Republican Congress covering into the general Treasury $54,207,95.75 belonging to the holders of national-bank notes. This was a trust fund deposited in the Treasury for the redemption of national-bank notes, but in anticipation of the condition which now confronts us, of augmenting expenditures and dwindling revenues, the Republican party covered it into the general Treasury.

A third fact, conclusive in itself, was the effort of the Secretary of Treasury to refund the entire bonded indebtedness which matured on the 1st of September last. The Secretary was not entirely successful in his efforts, being reluctantly compelled to redeem about $20,000,000 of the maturing debt; $25,364,500, was however, refunded pursuant to an agreement with the holders of that indebtedness.

A fourth significant fact is the appearance of the one hundred millions of gold reserve as a part of the available cash in the Treasury, associated with the assertion of the Secretary that he would use it if the Treasury found itself in a "pinch." This is the fourth arch constituting a part of the bridge in our fiscal affairs, by which the Republican party hopes to span the ever-widening chasm between receipts and expenditures.

THE BONDED DEBT.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at this point I desire to call attention to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, that this Administration has saved fifty-five millions annually in interest on the bonded debt. He states the entire bond purchases under this Administration to be $259,093,650. This, of course, includes the bonds purchased for the sinking fund, but it is impossible that any such annual saving in interest could have been made. The gentleman should rather have said that the Treasury officials estimated that the saving of interest before the maturity of the purchased bonds would amount to $55,000,000.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this so-called estimated saving (?) is the necessary result of that system of tariff taxation which compelled many of the people to borrow money at 10 per cent in order to pay taxes exacted from them by the Republican party, not for the purpose of meeting the just demands of an economic fiscal administration, but rather to buy Government bonds at from 8 to 29 per cent premium, a large part of the bonds not being due until 1907.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I will incorporate in my remarks tabular statements showing the amount of bonds purchased, including those purchased for the sinking fund, together with their cost, during the periods covered by the Administrations of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Harrison, respectively.

CLEVELAND'S ADMINISTRATION.

Reduction of the interest-bearing debt of the United States during the period from March 1, 1885, to March 1, 1889, and premiums paid.

	Three per cent bonds.	Four per cent bonds.	Four and one-half per cent bonds.	Total.
Principal	$194,190,500.00	$56,726,550.00	$87,157,800.00	$338,074,850.00
Cost (amount paid)	194,190,500.00	72,654,890.28	94,419,251.77	361,264,642.05
Premiums paid				23,189,792.05

HARRISON'S ADMINISTRATION.

Reduction of the interest-bearing debt of the United States since March, 1, 1889, and premiums paid.

	Four per cent.	Four and one-half per cent.	Total.
Principal	$121,615,950.00	$137,477,700.00	$259,093,650.00
Cost	152,958,818.83	143,358,112.37	296,316,931.20
Premiums paid			37,223,281.20

The above table, Mr. Speaker, includes, as I have stated, the requirements of the sinking fund, but eliminating the amount of this obligation, the books of the Treasury disclose that since March 1, 1885, $349,313,274.26 of the surplus revenues have been used in the purchase of Government bonds, $35,134,724.26 having been paid as premiums. Of this amount, $175,883,207.90 was expended under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland, and $173,430,266.36, under that of Mr. Harrison. In other words, to state the situation tersely, the Republican system of high tariff has exacted from the people three hundred and fifty millions of unnecessary taxes, which the Treasury officials have been compelled to employ in the purchase of bonds, many of which will not mature for two decades.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Did the gentleman say that I stated the saving at $55,000,000 annually?

Mr. DOCKERY. That was the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then I made a mistake.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am quite willing that the gentleman shall correct his error.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What I meant was that there had been a total saving of $55,000,000 in the three years of Republican administration, from the time when President Harrison took the helm.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Before the gentleman from Missouri resumes, will he allow me to put one question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It is simply this: If we had, according to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, sufficient funds in the Treasury to meet all the demands on the Government, why did the Secretary of the Treasury apply to the holders of our bonds to extend them at the rate of 2 per cent per annum? Why was that done if there was money in the Treasury sufficient for the payment of those bonds? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I am obliged to the gentleman from Mississippi, but was just coming to that point, and will permit the Secretary of the Treasury to answer for himself. Here is what the Secretary says in the interview published in the Star, to which I have heretofore referred:

Now as to the redemption of the 4½ per cent bonds. I am thinking of trying to substitute 2 percents for them, as Mr. Windom proposed. If it can be done there will be two advantages in it over the redemption. To be able to float 2 per cent bonds will demonstrate the extraordinary soundness of the Government credit, and the money that would be required to redeem the four-and-a-halfs may be used for the purchase of fours at a saving of 2 per cent of the interest that would be paid on them up to the time of maturity.

Now, sir, will the gentleman from Iowa, or the Secretary of the Treasury tell the country how many of the fours have been purchased pursuant to that expedient?

Another reason assigned by the Secretary is to be found on page 11 of his report, in which he says:

Nearly twenty-six and one-half millions of the registered bonds were deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for circulation and public moneys, and many of the banks to which they belonged would be obliged to replace them with other bonds at great expense or go into liquidation whenever it should be necessary that the 4½ per cents be surrendered. It was apparent, therefore, that an unqualified call for the redemption of the loan, fixing its maturity in September, would project a disturbing element into the finances of the country at a time when its resources are usually severely taxed by the movement of agricultural products.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, he had three objects in view in refunding the bonds, and I resent the intimation of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Treasury balance was not ample. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. You do? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly I do. [Laughter.] He had the money there. The Secretary did not fail to pay the twenty-five millions because of lack of money in the Treasury, but because he thought it necessary to demonstrate the "extraordinary soundness of the Government credit" in being able to float 2 per cent bonds. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Another reason why he preferred to extend the bonds was not because he did not have money, but because he desired to extend that debt at 2 per cent and then employ the surplus in the Treasury to buy 4 per cent bonds. Unfortunately, however, for that theory no 4 per cent bonds have been purchased. But, Mr. Speaker, the last, and probably the controlling reason for this extraordinary action of the Secretary, aside from the condition of the Treasury itself, is stated on page 11 of this report, that it would accommodate the national banks and prevent the expense on their part of exchanging their 4½ bonds for fours.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. For the purpose, no doubt, of allowing the national banks to lend money to the people at 10 per cent per annum. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly, and by the same Administration whose most distinguished official in 1888 denounced the Administration of Mr. Cleveland because Secretary Fairchild deposited public money in national banks, and declared that the policy of Mr. Harrison would be the withdrawal of the money from the "pet national banks," as he characterized them. But, sir, what are the facts of history? Nearly three years have passed of the present Administration, and of the $48,818,991.63 deposited in the national banks, when the present Executive was inaugurated, $15,437,669.91 are still deposited with these banks. I criticised Mr. Fairchild's policy then in respect to this deposit, as I do now the policy of the present Secretary of the Treasury.

THE HOLMAN RESOLUTIONS.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention for a few moments to the resolutions now under consideration. Apprehension has been expressed in some quarters that if the resolutions offered by the honorable gentleman from Indiana should prevail, certain public interests would be imperiled. The eminent gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], in the resolution which he offered as a substitute for the Holman resolutions, insists that the improvement of rivers and harbors will be jeopardized under the operation of the proposed resolutions. I am quite surprised at the suggestion, coming, as it does, from a distinguished exponent of the Administration.

If the gentleman has carefully examined the estimates now pending before the Committee on Appropriations, of which he is a member, he will ascertain that this Administration has not submitted an estimate for a single dollar of expenditure on account of rivers and harbors for the ensuing fiscal year, although the Engineer Department recommends $58,064,950 for this service; and yet the gentleman from Maine, by his substitute, professes great devotion to that particular interest. The appropriations for rivers and harbors by the "billion dollar Congress" were $25,136,295, but Secretary Foster in the Book of Estimates expressly excepts estimates for rivers and harbors, and says:

NOTE.—The following statement is not furnished as a part of the "annual estimates for the public service" required by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., p. 370), to be furnished by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, but is inserted as a convenient and customary summary of items taken from the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for the fiscal year 1891, showing under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., p. 421), "the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year" on each of the works mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, when my attention was first called to the absence of an estimate for rivers and harbors I was somewhat astonished, but upon an examination of the estimated receipts and expenditures for the ensuing year my amazement ceased. The estimates for the fiscal year 1893 call for $489,000,000 of appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without the river and harbor bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Without the river and harbor bill, as suggested by my friend from Indiana—$489,000,000 of appropriations, and only $455,000,000 of revenue. In other words, excluding the river and harbor bill, which usually carries $22,000,000 to $24,000,000, the estimates submitted for the administration of the public service during the next year involves a deficit, on the basis of appropriations and revenues, of $34,595,743.17.

That is the reason why the river and harbor estimate was eliminated from the estimates submitted to Congress at the beginning of this session—$35,000,000 of deficiency, according to Secretary Foster's figures for the next fiscal year, exclusive of rivers and harbors, deficiencies, and miscellaneous items of appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. My friend from Missouri certainly does not wish to misrepresent the Secretary of the Treasury. He will find a statement of his estimate on page 9 of his report. The estimated revenue is $455,000,000, and in round numbers the estimate of appropriations is $441,000,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Four hundred and eighty-nine million nine hundred and thirty-two thousand and ninety-three dollars and sixty-one cents is the estimate of appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask my friend to look at page 9 of the Secretary's report.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is in error. The estimate is $489,000,000, as you will find on a further examination.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will look at page 9 of the official report of the Secretary he will see it plainly stated.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have here the official table prepared by the clerks of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will not my friend from Missouri read from the Secretary's report?

Mr. DOCKERY. I am quoting from the official table of the clerks of the Appropriations Committees.

If upon examination I ascertain the statement to be incorrect I will correct it with pleasure.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the gentleman to read from page 9 of the Secretary's report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the statement to which the gentleman refers, but the estimates I present are taken from the official table prepared by the clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations. It is a—

Table comparing, by bills, estimates of regular annual appropriations for the fiscal year 1892 with those for 1893, and also comparing the appropriations made by the general appropriation acts for 1892 (exclusive of deficiency and miscellaneous appropriations) with the estimates for 1893, and showing the aggregate of estimated regular annual and permanent appropriations and amount of estimated revenues for 1893.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why does not the gentleman read from the report of the Secretary, when he has made the statement that he is giving the Secretary's figures?

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Maine will be patient——

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman has stated that the Secretary of the Treasury so stated.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Maine heard my statement, twice repeated, he understands that I am quoting from the official table prepared by the clerks of the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations, both of whom unite in the statement of this official table that the appropriations will aggregate $489,000,000 and the revenues $455,000,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. But if the gentleman will pardon me, because he does not want to misrepresent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not yield.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am simply calling the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to a plain statement of figures in the Secretary's report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have repeatedly stated to the gentleman from Maine that if after examination of the matter I find I am in error I will make the correction before I take my seat.

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call attention to another matter. But before proceeding I desire now, with all due respect to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], to correct the error (?) into which I have unwittingly fallen. Upon examination I find that in observing the plain mandates of the law the clerk of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations estimated for the next fiscal year the amount required by the act establishing the sinking fund. It appears, however, from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury that he proposes to ignore and disregard the requirements of the sinking-fund act for the next fiscal year. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This is the explanation of the discrepancy between the estimates of the gentleman charged by law with the duty of preparing the table of appropriations as shown by the Book of Estimates and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which it appears that he proposes to suspend the operations of the sinking fund. That is the proposition, and I trust that it is a sufficient and satisfactory answer to the gentleman from Maine. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am abundantly vindicated from the assault upon my position made by the gentleman from Iowa, and will therefore trespass but a few moments more upon the attention of the House. The situation, so far as the sinking fund is involved, may be concisely stated: There has been no actual default as yet in providing for that fund during the fiscal year which ends on the 1st of July next, but it is manifest, as heretofore explained, that the Secretary of the Treasury does not intend to provide $10,747,362 of its estimated requirements.

Gentlemen of the minority have criticised me for what they were pleased to term an unwarranted assault upon the public credit. Investigation shows, nevertheless, that the Secretary makes no provision in his estimates for nearly one-fourth of the sinking fund for the present year, while for the next fiscal year the entire sinking fund is to be in default.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion permit me to say that I have not in any wise overdrawn the unfortunate Treasury situation. I have adverted to it with no feeling of pride, although the Republican party is responsible for its condition, because I do not exult in an exhibit which shows increasing expenditures and decreasing revenues. I have, however, felt constrained to present the exact situation of the Treasury, so that in entering upon the threshold of the business of this Congress Democratic members might understand the absolute necessity for economy in all departments of the Government.

The resolutions offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] ought to prevail, sir, not only upon the question of subsidies and of bounties, but as well to the requirement of limitation of public expenditures for the next fiscal year to the actual needs of the public service.

During the long period of Democratic ascendency in national affairs the Democratic party has been as a rule economical in the disbursement of public money. During the period of its supremacy, prior to the war, its attitude in respect to revenues and expenditures was such that the present Secretary of State in his "Twenty Years of Congress" pays a high tribute to the leaders of that party when he declares that "during the long period of their domination they guarded the Treasury against every form of corruption and every attempt at extravagance."

That, sir, is the encomium of the great leader of the Republican party upon the fiscal management of the Democratic party before the war. Let us with equal fidelity guard the Treasury against every attempt at extravagance. If we fail in this, Mr. Speaker, expenditures will mount up to such a stupendous aggregate that it will be impossible, even by employing the $100,000,000 of gold reserve, to prevent in the near future an actual Treasury deficiency. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has occupied fifty minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] so much of our hour and three minutes as he may desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] requests unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I beg to make the same request for all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri requests that all gentlemen, desiring to do so, may print remarks on this subject in the RECORD.

Mr. BURROWS. All those who have addressed the House, not to everyone. The Chair is not stating accurately the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that was the request of the gentleman from Missouri, that he desired it would be extended to everyone.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no; only gentlemen who are heard in the House.

Mr. OWENS. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that those gentlemen who have addressed the House on this subject may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. OWENS. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no difference of opinion in the House, certainly none on this side of the House, on the general principle that all appropriations should be for public and not for private objects. The difference of opinion there arises not on the principle, but as to the application of it. The gentleman from Indiana, for example [Mr. HOLMAN], has voted, I think, against every river and harbor bill, because he believes that appropriations for rivers and harbors are for private rather than public benefit. Now, while agreeing on the principle that all appropriations should be for public objects and for the benefit of the whole people, there is an honest difference of opinion in the application of that principle.

The gentleman from Indiana seeks by his resolution, so far as a resolution can do it, to bind the judgment of the members of this House on the question to his own ideas as to what is a public and what is a private object. The substitute which I have offered endeavors to put the principle so clearly that the gentleman from Indiana can not claim, after his resolution is passed, that the House is precluded from passing bills which he may think are not for public advantage, but which to the majority of the House seem to be so.

It is important, therefore, that there should be a distinct statement of what the House means when it pledges itself to make no appropriations for private purposes. Therefore, in the substitute that I have offered, following the line of the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana that all appropriations should be for public purposes, I have defined distinctly certain lines of appropriation, which, while the gentleman from Indiana may regard them as for private purposes, this House and the Houses which have preceded it for half a century, may regard and have regarded as for public advantage. The gentleman from Indiana might hold, for instance, that appropriations for the maintenance of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts were for private purposes——

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is a public purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman admits that that is a public purpose, but my supposition illustrates the principle.

Therefore, if a declaration is to be made purely for buncombe—for I take it that that states the fact—in order that it may be sounded from one end of this country to the other for some partisan purpose, I submit that the declaration should be so clearly made that he who runs may read, so that after having adopted such a resolution, gentlemen can not proceed to vote for river and harbor appropriations and for bills for private purposes manifestly contradictory to the principle which he has aided in enunciating, and treat the whole resolution as a mere joke. If there is to be a declaration, let it be one so clearly defined that there may be no misunderstanding.

As a matter of fact, what practical object is to be accomplished by the resolution? There is no legislation before this House, or coming before this House, so far as I know, that proposes to give bounties for any purpose. The only bounty that is now authorized by law, or that has been since, under the administration of Thomas Jefferson, a bounty was given to the sea fisheries, is that given for the production of sugar. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Indiana to declare by this resolution that the bounty for the production of sugar shall be repealed? If so, why not introduce a resolution emphatically and distinctly stating that object, or, better still, a bill for that purpose, instead of a resolution like this, under which the gentleman's practical understanding of the matter may be presented one way one day and another way another day?

But I suppose, notwithstanding the fact that the bounty on sugar is the only one to which the declaration of the gentleman's resolution can apply, that it is doubtful whether the Ways and Means Committee of this House, composed of a majority of the political friends of the gentleman from Indiana, will report a bill abolishing that bounty. I say it is doubtful whether the only thing to which his resolution would apply will even be attempted to be brought under its operation by the gentlemen upon the other side who vote for this resolution. At any rate, I shall await with some interest the report of a bill from the committee to repeal the bounty on the only article in this country upon which a bounty is paid, and will observe with interest the vote upon it on that side of the House, but I predict that the question will not even be raised, much less a bill passed repealing that bounty.

If it is proposed, as I have already said, to make a distinct declaration of principles, let it be clear and distinct; let it be a declaration that we are all opposed to appropriations simply for private purposes—because every gentleman upon this floor is opposed to such appropriations. Let it also assert that this is not to be construed to mean that we are not in favor of appropriations, which in the judgment of this House and of the people are directly or indirectly for the benefit of the whole people. I believe that appropriations for rivers and harbors are directly or indirectly for the benefit of the whole people. I believe that agricultural colleges are directly or indirectly for the benefit of the whole people. I believe that even private pension acts are directly or indirectly for the benefit of the whole people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to devote some attention to the charges which have been made upon this floor with reference to the condition of the finances of this country. It seems to me, sir, that when we approach this subject we should endeavor to get down to the facts. There ought not to be any attempt to make political capital out of business propositions which relate to the interests of the whole people. If this country is in the financial condition which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asserted here the other day, then the business interests of this country may well take alarm. But, Mr. Speaker, there is no gentleman thoroughly acquainted with the facts who does not understand that the statements which the gentleman from Missouri made here, with the inferences which those who are not acquainted with the use of technical expressions have drawn and will draw, will give the impression to the country that we are already in a state of bankruptcy.

Let me read, in view of what the gentleman said on Wednesday, the statement which the gentleman from Missouri made a few days ago:

> In other words, of the appropriations made by the billion-dollar Congress for the last fiscal year and the first six months of the present year, there remains $65,488,166.56 unpaid.

The gentleman is particular even to the cents. This was on the 1st day of January, 1892, when, as the gentleman claimed, there was a Treasury surplus of only $20,000,000 to pay this amount. He continued:

> If to this unpaid mortgage upon the resources of the Government is added the $25,000 000 of 4½ per cent bonds refunded and the forty-nine odd millions demanded by the sinking fund, it becomes apparent—— > it becomes apparent that the matured national indebtedness [on the 1st day of January, 1892] aggregates $140,077,015.25.

Mark the words—

The gentleman is very accurate as to the cents. Now, a few days after the gentleman made this remarkable statement in the House, and after it had been sent out to the country, he came in with a modification of his statement. He wished to make a correction of $49,000,000! A small matter, perhaps, for a gentleman who was making such charges, I admit. But think of a gentleman supposed to have official knowledge sending out to the country a statement of the matured indebtedness of this Government on the 1st day of January, and that statement requiring a reduction of $49,000,000 within three days!

But more than that, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman asserted that the $25,000,000 of refunded 4½ per cent bonds were matured indebtedness on the 1st day of January, 1892. Matured indebtedness! A bond bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent, payable when? At the pleasure of the Government—next year, ten years hence, only when the Government desires to pay it. Such a bond is counted by the gentleman from Missouri as a "matured indebtedness." What does the gentleman mean by "matured?" What is to be said of such a statement as that sent broadcast through the country, that $25,000,000 of bonds, payable only at the pleasure of the Government, had matured on the 1st day of January, and were standing as an overdue liability.

Mr. DOCKERY. This administration defaulted on their payment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Ah; but the gentleman well understands that he was speaking of the 1st day of January; and he knew when he made the statement that at that time those $25,000,000 of bonds were not matured and were not an overdue liability.

Mr. DOCKERY. Those obligations were past due; this administration could not pay them because it had not the money.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman's statement referred to the situation on the 1st day of January.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Administration had not the money to pay those obligations, and of course had to extend them.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Administration purchased and paid off the interest-bearing debt to the extent of $125,000,000 between July 1, 1890, and October 1, 1891.

The gentleman, proceeding, asserts that $30,000,000 of overdue and unpaid appropriations of the last fiscal year have come over to be paid in this fiscal year. Now, I venture to say that the gentleman has not any such official knowledge. All that is known respecting the matter is that there was a certain amount—a mere rough computation—say $30,000,000, the amount usually coming over from one year to another, which had not been expended at the end of the fiscal year 1891.

That is the situation at the end of every fiscal year. In continuous appropriations for public works there is always a certain amount which can not be expended within the fiscal year. For example, $100,000 was appropriated at the recent session of Congress for a public building, and included in the appropriations for the present fiscal year. Now, gentlemen, know that in this fiscal year nothing can be done except to secure a lot and pay for it, so that instead of the whole $100,000 being expended in the year, it is probable that not over $15,000 will be expended, $85,000 going over to next year. But is the balance entirely expended the next year? Never. It always takes two or three years to expend such an appropriation. Fifteen thousand dollars of the $100,000 may be expended this year; next year $25,000 more may perhaps be expended, and year after $25,000 more; and so on from year to year. That is the case with all continuous appropriations.

Yet the gentleman seeks to have the country understand that because $30,000,000 of appropriations for the last fiscal year had not been expended on the 30th day of June last, therefore this amount must all be expended during the present fiscal year.

I had a little curiosity to ascertain what proportion of the continuous appropriation coming over from one fiscal year to another is usually expended in the next fiscal year. The gentleman says that $30,000,000 of appropriations has come over from the last fiscal year. Now, I find that during the first six months of this fiscal year only $9,000,000 of the appropriations for the last fiscal year had been expended; yet every dollar was expended which could be efficiently and economically. On that basis there would be an expenditure in the whole fiscal year of only $18,000,000 instead of $30,000,000.

Now, how did the gentleman from Missouri figure out that $35,000,000 of the appropriations for the present fiscal year in excess of the revenue became a matured indebtedness on the 1st of January?

The gentleman from Missouri states that "the aggregate liabilities upon the national income for the present fiscal year are $544,531,672.55."

He reaches this figure by combining the regular annual appropriations of the last Congress, $359,560,586.49; the miscellaneous appropriations, $4,271,531.10; and the estimates of permanent annual appropriations, $122,486,808, all aggregating $486,318,925.99, and then adding to this sum $38,699,746.96 which were appropriated for and expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and also $19,000,000 more which he thinks will be required this year. I must confess my surprise that the gentleman from Missouri should include as a part of this year's appropriations and expenditures the deficiency appropriation for the last fiscal year, and expended and included in last year's financial exhibit. Obviously these thirty-eight and a half millions have no place in any estimates for this year.

The appropriations for the present fiscal year are four hundred and eighty-six and a quarter millions, not five hundred and twenty-five millions, as the gentleman from Missouri assumes. Assuming that nearly nineteen millions, as the gentleman affirms, should be added to these figures for expenditures not estimated and deficiencies, etc., and deducting from the estimates of permanent appropriations, the sinking fund, and the post-office expenditures (seventy-one millions) paid from postal revenues (as the gentleman admits should be done), both amounting to one hundred and twenty and a quarter millions, then the whole amount to be accounted for in the present fiscal year is three hundred and eighty-five and a quarter millions, instead of four hundred and twenty-two millions, as claimed by the gentleman from Missouri. This, however, includes expenditures of about thirteen and a quarter millions on account of bank redemption fund, which are not, in any proper sense, the ordinary expenses of government. Deduct this amount and there remains three hundred and seventy-two millions.

The assumption of the gentleman is that all the appropriations made for the present fiscal year must be expended during the year, notwithstanding he informs us that thirty millions of appropriations for the last fiscal year, which he proposes to add to the appropriations for the present year, were not expended.

Did it not occur to the gentleman that the same reasons which prevented the expenditure of thirty millions of last year's continuous appropriations would also make it impracticable to spend at least as large an amount of the continuing appropriations for this year? Did it not occur to the gentleman that continuous appropriations for public buildings, fortifications, docks, and other public works can not in the nature of the case be expended to any considerable extent in the first fiscal year after they are made, but must be carried over from year to year until they are completed?

Now, as a matter of fact, the appropriations for continuous public works were larger than usual, and consequently the amount of unexpended appropriations for continuing public works for the present fiscal year that can not be expended this year must inevitably be at least four millions more than the previous fiscal year, and make the amount of the appropriations for this year to be carried over to succeeding fiscal years at least four millions more than the thirty millions carried over from the last fiscal year, or thirty-four millions.

Bearing in mind, therefore, that eighteen millions of the unexpended continuous appropriations of last year will probably be expended this year, and that probably thirty-four millions of the continued appropriations for the present year must go over to future fiscal years, let us take up again the three hundred and seventy-two million appropriations made and possibly to be made, which, we have seen, appear charged to the present fiscal year.

In the first place, it will be observed that the appropriations for pensions are one hundred and thirty-five millions, but the expenditures for pensions for the first half of the present fiscal year were only a little over sixty-one and one-fourth millions, and the Commissioner of Pensions informs us that the expenditures for the whole fiscal year will not exceed one hundred and twenty-five millions. Inasmuch as at the end of the year this ten millions balance will be covered into the Treasury, this amount should be deducted from three hundred and seventy-two millions, leaving three hundred and sixty-two millions as the appropriations for this year.

But the Register's report shows that on the average at least five millions of the aggregate of the regular appropriations for each year are unexpended at the end of each fiscal year and are ultimately covered into the Treasury, as regular annual appropriations can be used only for payment of expenditures incurred in the fiscal year for which they are made. Then there are three millions appropriated with reference to the Choctaw lands, which can not be used this year for the reasons stated in the President's message. Deducting these eight millions, and also deducting thirty-four millions of continued appropriations, which there is good reason to believe can not be used this year, and there remains three hundred and twenty millions appropriated for the present fiscal year which it is probable will be expended.

If there be added to this eighteen millions of the unexpended balance of last year that will probably be expended this year, we have three hundred and thirty-eight millions as the probable expenditure for the current fiscal year, instead of four hundred and twenty-two millions, as the gentleman from Missouri claims; and thirty-four millions of continuous appropriations to go over to the next and succeeding fiscal years, just as about thirty millions have come over to this year from last year.

The Secretary of the Treasury says, in his annual report, that for the present fiscal year the revenues are estimated to be $362,000,000, outside of the $71,000,000 of the postal receipts which go directly to the maintaining of the Post-Office Department, and that the estimated expenditures, excluding the postal receipts expended, will be $338,000,000; almost exactly the figures as ascertained after two months' additional expenditures have been incurred. This results, not in a deficiency of $100,000,000, or thereabouts, as intimated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], at the end of this fiscal year, but a surplus for the year of $24,000,000.

There will come out of this surplus whatever payments may be made on account of the bank redemption fund in excess of the amount deposited. While these are not current expenditures, yet as the Government has used $54,000,000 of the bank redemption fund, as authorized by the act of 1890, and paid off the debt to that extent, whatever bank notes of banks in liquidation or reducing circulation may come into the Treasury, must be redeemed from the current revenue, and it is estimated that there will be $13,500,000 required outside of receipts from deposits. So that at the end of this fiscal year not only will every expenditure that properly belongs to this year that can be wisely expended be paid from the revenue for the current year, but the $13,500,000 called for by the bank redemption fund, which fund has been used in redeeming the public debt, will also be paid, and there will still remain a surplus in the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have gone over these figures somewhat in detail because it seems to me that on a point of this importance, one that relates to a practical business matter, there ought to be no attempt to make party capital when that capital is to be made at the expense of the reputation of the Government; there ought not to be unfounded charges and statements made which go to the country and give the impression that this great Government is on the eve of bankruptcy. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in October, 1890, a tariff bill was passed which largely reduced the revenue. That bill was passed in response to demands from one end of the country to the other that the revenue should be reduced to the actual wants of the Treasury, and that a surplus should not be piled up which could only be used in purchasing unmatured debt at a large premium.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses nearly every gentleman who rose upon the other side of the House pointed his speech with the demand that the revenue should be reduced to the wants of the Government, and that a surplus should not be accumulated.

When the Republicans came into power in this House, in the Fifty-first Congress, they heeded the demands which the gentlemen upon the other side had not been able to respond to. They reduced the revenue, first, by the abolition of the duty on sugar, an article of food that enters into every family in the land, and which is consumed by the poor man nearly to the same extent that it is in the families of the rich. They abolished the duty because of the fact that nearly the whole consumption of sugar in this country must be obtained from abroad, and therefore that the duty must be added to the cost and be a tax upon the people. We reduced the revenue by that one act $60,000,000 per annum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one would suppose that when gentlemen on the other side for four years had been demanding a reduction of the revenue they would have been exceedingly gratified at such an accomplishment. But no; when they had obtained what they professed to wish they were as much dissatisfied with that as when there was thrust upon them what they did not want. In view of this large reduction of revenue, the expenditures were expected to come very nearly to the revenue; and that is just what the gentlemen on the other side profess to desire.

In spite of the declarations that the Treasury would be bankrupt, a declaration that started in the last hours of the last Congress and has followed us all through the year, and notwithstanding this large reduction of the revenues, the official statement of the Secretary of the Treasury and the figures so far as they can be verified show that with this large reduction we still have ample revenue to pay all the legitimate demands upon the Treasury.

The surplus at the end of the year will be small; it ought to be small. The revenues ought to be substantially what are required for an economical administration of the Government, and they have been reduced to this extent. Now, I trust that gentlemen of this House, for I take it there is no difference of opinion upon that point, will be prepared in their appropriations to make them wisely economical and not niggardly parsimonious, which always results in loss, for in a wise appropriation of money the benefits that result are always such as justify the appropriation. In view of the fact that the revenue has been reduced wisely to this extent, and that our expenditures must and ought to be brought within this expected revenue, I am sure it will rejoice the great body of the citizens in this country, without distinction of party, to know that all the predictions that have been made of a bankrupt Treasury, predictions commenced months ago, predictions continued up to this hour, have all proved to be false and will continue to prove false.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says that the Secretary of the Treasury does not propose to set aside the amount that may be required for the sinking fund for the next fiscal year. I do not know whether he does or not, and I do not care. The sinking fund is simply an expedient of bookkeeping. It means nothing. At the time the sinking fund act was passed it strengthened the public credit. But now the Government needs no such expedient of bookkeeping. Its credit is better than that of any other nation. A payment on the sinking fund is simply a payment on the reduction of the public debt.

That is all it is; nothing more and nothing less. And by common consent we have reduced our revenue so as to not have a surplus which we can not get into circulation except by purchasing our bonds at a premium. And if we do not propose to go into the market and buy our bonds at a premium of course we shall not have to place that amount in the sinking fund. The requirements of the sinking-fund act have already been met in advance, so that it will not be necessary to purchase bonds to apply to it for several years.

The gentleman intimated that the fifty-four millions of the bank-redemption fund, which was covered into the Treasury by the act of 1890, had been used to pay current expenses. But the fact is that every dollar of this fund and every dollar of the surplus in the Treasury, outside of the thirty-four millions now in hand, has been used in reducing the public debt.

There are other points which have been suggested in the debate to which I should be pleased to refer, but there are other gentlemen who desire to speak upon the pending resolution, and I must defer further reference to the work of the last Congress to another time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGLEY. I return that to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think it is twenty-three minutes, if the Speaker will again examine. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk who is keeping the time states to the Chair that the gentleman has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana if he wants to consume any more of his time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Texas will occupy ten minutes of the time which has been given him by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then the gentleman wants us to use the remainder of our time. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that we might as well alternate a little.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a time in the history of this country when the United States Congress should call a halt in the expenditure, extravagantly and unnecessarily, of the people's money, that time is now. From one end of this land to the other, and from one side to the other, there is a class of people in this country that are more depressed, more in debt than ever before since the history of the country began. I received a letter this morning from a State senator of my State, and in closing that letter he makes this remark:

> If you could come to Georgia now you would find the most important officer within the limits of our State to be the militia district constable, who is selling out at public outcry on every court day, from the earliest hour to the latest hour that the law permits, property that the farmers last spring paid from $150 to $175 for. They are now realizing only $20 to $40, and that is applied on their debts.

Mr. Speaker, there is a cause for this, and I want to appeal to our friends on the Republican side of the House, as well as to those on this side, and tell them that it is due to themselves and to their constituents that they should understand the cause and give the relief.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] remarked a little while ago that this resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was nothing more nor less than a platform. I suppose he meant a Democratic platform. Well, if it is that, and if it is all wrong, as you think, what business have you got with it? [Laughter.] Why not let it go out to the world wrong? If it is wrong it will only help the Republicans in 1892. But the very fight made by the gentleman against these resolutions contradicts the position which he takes on this floor. If these resolutions are adopted they will help on one side and hurt on the other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to compare two periods in the history of this country, both when we were upon a peace footing. I want to take the period of 1860, when I understand the Republican party had possession of the House, and the period of 1891, when I know they had. In 1860 the expenditures of the Government were $63,130,598. With a population of 31,443,321, that was a tax of $2.08 per capita. At that time 21 pounds of cotton would have paid my part of the national tax. At that time one bushel and a half of Kansas wheat would have paid a farmer's part of the national tax also.

In 1891 the national expenditures were $365,773,905. There was $100,000,000 of money paid on the public debt, and in that $365,000,000 there was included $10,401,220 paid as premiums upon the national debt. In other words, we paid $10,441,220 for the privilege of getting in our bonds before maturity. That left us a tax of $6 per capita, and in that $6 is not included one great item of expense to the producer and the consumer—the millions of money paid by them to the protected "home industries," from which the Government does not receive a single dollar. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If you could add that it would greatly increase the amount. The best estimate of that amount that I have seen comes from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and my recollection is that that estimate made it about $2.75 per capita. Add that to the $6 and you have $8.75 per capita paid by the producers of this country in 1891, as against $2.08 in 1860. It will now take 100 pounds of Georgia cotton to pay my part of the per capita tax. In 1860, 21 pounds of cotton paid this tax. In 1860 we had the virgin soil in Georgia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Alabama, and did not use fertilizers. Now there must be added to the cost of producing the cotton the cost of commercial fertilizers and during the interval we have had no new invention made of implements to help either to cultivate or to gather the crop, so that cotton costs now more per pound than it cost in 1860, and yet our national tax is four times as great per capita as it was at that time. In 1860, I repeat, one bushel and a half of Kansas wheat met the per capita tax. Now it takes eight bushels and a half.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit this proposition: How can the producers of this country live under such a system of taxation? How? Let me foot up. The State and county tax is estimated at $4 per capita. Add to that the municipal taxation, which I understand to be over $3 per capita, and you have over $7. Add that to the $8, and you have got a tax of about $15 per capita for every man, woman, and child in this country, being equal to, if not in excess of, the circulating medium of the country. What is it per family? Let us go back to the per capita tax of $6, made necessary by the expenditures of the recent billion-dollar Congress—and I want to say to the gentlemen on the Republican side who denied the proposition, that the amount comes as near being a billion as anything you ever saw that didn't figure out quite a billion.

What is it per family? Take a family of five persons. The national taxation amounts to about $40, the value of one whole bale of cotton. The State, county and municipal taxation is equivalent to two more bales of cotton; that is three bales of cotton in all. The families producing cotton in Georgia do not make on the average over six bales of cotton during the year; and you have three bales gone for national, State, county, and municipal taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I assert in my place without the fear of successful contradiction, that taxation in its last analysis means nothing but the sweat of the face.

Now the price of cotton has gone down from 10 cents in 1860 to 6¼ cents, the price in Augusta, Ga., to-day. Wheat has gone down in the same proportion. On the other hand the legislation of Congress, as I propose to show when a proper opportunity presents itself, is decreasing the price of farm products and increasing taxation. Thus taxation is increased while our means of paying taxes is reduced.

Is it not time, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers and other laborers of this country should be heard upon this floor—not from a partisan standpoint—I appeal to the good sense and honesty of our Republican friends—is it not time to grant relief?

Why, Mr. Speaker, the resolutions introduced by the gentleman from Indiana embody not only sound Democratic policy and principle, but they embody in their essence simple honesty and statesmanship; and I do not see how any gentleman on this floor, whether he belongs to the Democratic party or to the Republican party or to a "third party," can make up his mind to do anything else than support these resolutions.

The gentleman from Maine has said that we have no legislation introduced here which calls for these resolutions. I admit that fact; but, sir, we want to forestall any such legislation as we had in the last Congress: that is the purpose. I presume, sir, that if a resolution of this kind had been presented at the beginning of the last Congress it would have been adopted. And now, at the beginning of this Fifty-second Congress, let us plant ourselves upon the principles of retrenchment and reform. For whose sake? For mine? For yours? For the sake of the Democratic party or the Republican party? No. I appeal to you to do this for the sake of the people—for my constituency and yours—for the interest of the working people, north and south, east and west.

The gentleman says these resolutions are nothing but "buncombe;" that they present nothing practical. Mr. Speaker, if the seats on this floor could be vacated to-day and we could call in here agriculturists from Maine or Georgia, laborers from Texas or Carolina—if they could take these seats and discuss this resolution, I will guarantee that not two out of a thousand would ever think of opposing such a proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No, Mr. Speaker; there are men in this country who would not consider these resolutions "buncombe;" they are looking to-day with their eyes and listening with their ears for some sign of relief to be afforded by the legislation of this Democratic House. Shall they have it? Or will you send them back such word as we have received for the last twenty-five years from Washington City: "Work on, and we will take care of the Government?"

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say, in all kindness and sincerity, that the people who are behind us at our homes are in a desperate condition. Would not the passage of such a resolution as this encourage them? Suppose that it does not put a single dollar into any man's pocket; would not the poor farmer, who has seen his last mule or his last cow sold under the hammer of the constable, start out with brighter hope, with more encouragement to work during this year 1892 if he had before him this resolution, adopted by this House of Representatives, guaranteeing to him that he should not be overtaxed while we hold the reins of Government? I will stand by the essence of this resolution. Sink or swim, I am in favor of it.

Now, let our motto be in this session of Congress: Legislation for the people—such legislation as will meet the wants of all the people, from every section of this country, and thus restore the confidence of the people in the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now control?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, as I have only ten minutes within which to address the House, I shall confine my remarks to but a single proposition, which is that unless the expenses of the Government be greatly curtailed, there must necessarily be a refunding of the bonded debt.

In his report to the present Congress, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1893 will be:

From internal revenue	158,000,000.00
From miscellaneous sources	22,000,000.00
From postal service	80,336,350.44
Total estimated revenues	455,336,350.44

His estimates of appropriations required for the same period are as follows:

Legislative establishment		$3,492,089.95
Executive establishment—
Executive proper	$143,850.00
State Department	166,510.00
Treasury Department	9,108,386.10

Permanent annual appropriations—
Interest on the public debt	$26,000,000.00
Refunding—customs, internal revenue, etc	17,431,200.00
Collecting revenue from customs	5,500,000.00
Miscellaneous	24,300,680.00
		73,231,880.00
Total estimated appropriations, exclusive of sinking fund		441,300,093.61
Or an estimated surplus of		14,036,256.83

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that in this estimate he fails to include the sinking fund for 1893—an appropriation or expenditure which is made necessary by law.

According to the Secretary's statement there may be expected a surplus of revenue over expenditures during the year 1893 of $14,036,256.83. But, as I have already said, the item for the sinking fund is excluded.

The total interest-bearing debt of the United States on January 1, 1892, is as appears in the following statement:

Total interest-bearing debt of the United States on January 1, 1892.

Loan.	Amount of principal.	Date of maturity.	Rate of interest.
Bonds issued in aid of Pacific railroads, maturing—
1895	$2,362,000	January 16, 1895	6 per cent.
1895	640,000	November 1, 1895	6 per cent.
1896	3,680,000	January 1, 1896	6 per cent.
1896	4,320,000	February 1, 1896	6 per cent.
1897	9,712,000	January 1, 1897	6 per cent.
1898	29,304,952	January 1, 1898	6 per cent.
1899	14,004,560	January 1, 1899	6 per cent.
	64,623,512
Funded loan of 1891 continued at 2 per cent.	25,364,500	Option of the Government.	2 per cent.
Funded loan of 1907	559,574,000	Redeemable after July 1, 1907.	4 per cent.
Refunding certificates	88,470	Convertible into 4 per cent bonds.	4 per cent.
Total	649,650,482

From this it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the principal of the interest-bearing debt of the Federal Government amounts to $649,650,482. It is all redeemable at different dates on or before July 2, 1907. Beginning with the fiscal year 1893 and ending with the fiscal year 1907 there are fifteen fiscal years. If this indebtedness were separated into fifteen equal installments for payment there would be $43,310,032 principal to be retired each year in addition to the payment of the interest. The expenditure, Mr. Speaker, necessary to retire this amount annually can not be stated with certainty, as a large proportion of the indebtedness would have to be purchased before maturity at such prices as the holders of the bonds would be willing to accept.

It is impossible, therefore, to estimate what would be required to purchase annually bonds whose principal would aggregate $43,310,032, though it would be entirely safe to say that they could not be bought until maturity at their par value.

Now, the Secretary having omitted the sinking fund in his estimates for 1893, it is but right that his estimated expenditures should be increased by $43,310,032, which would have the effect to change his estimated surplus of $14,036,256.83 into a deficit of $29,273,775.17 against the Government of revenue as compared with expenditures during the fiscal year 1893.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the law which requires the annual setting apart of the sinking fund is mandatory, and that it is made the duty of the Treasury Department to do so not only for the protection of the bondholders, but also that provision might be made for the retirement of the entire bonded indebtedness by the time it falls due. Should this law be disregarded, what will be the result? If the interest only be paid, as seems to be contemplated by the Secretary of the Treasury, then unless the expenditures be decreased and the revenues increased the bonded debt must inevitably be refunded when the principal matures.

For the first time since 1865 we find the current expenditures outrunning the current receipts.

Mr. Speaker, when the present tariff law was under discussion in this House during the first session of the last Congress, in a speech which I had the honor to then make, I predicted that during the year 1893 the annual revenues would not be sufficient to meet the annual expenditures.

I see my friend from Iowa [referring to Mr. HENDERSON] smiling. He has sufficient time left him in this discussion to answer this question, and I put it to him for a reply, if according to the estimate of the Secretary of Treasury, with the addition of a sinking fund, there will not be, for 1893, a deficiency of revenue as compared with expenditure.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. He estimates a liberal surplus in that year alone. I was only laughing at the Democratic prophets generally.

Mr. SAYERS. Ah, the gentleman from Iowa may laugh now, but the time will come when he will be disposed to weep over the extravagance of the Republican party.

Mr. DOCKERY. They did in Iowa last fall. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is evident, beyond all question, that if we are to pay off our bonded indebtedness as it matures one of two things must be done, the revenue must be increased or the expenditure must be diminished. I prefer the latter method. It will be more in keeping with the wishes and the interests of the people, especially of the laboring and agricultural classes. They do not desire to have a bonded indebtedness, with all of its burdens and with its exemption from taxation, to rest upon them and their posterity forever. The evils which they have already suffered under it have been scarcely bearable. Sir, from the very foundation of the Government up to our civil war, whenever a bonded indebtedness existed, no Congress ever met or sat without a message from the President deprecating the existence of such an indebtedness and urging provision for its speedy payment.

It was a good policy then—it is a better policy now.

In view of the condition of the agricultural classes as portrayed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], and of the Treasury, as announced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], there is and there can be but one solution to this embarrassing question—lighten taxation, reduce expenditures, and discharge the public indebtedness as it falls due.

This was good Democratic doctrine in the better and purer days of the Republic, and it will be well for the country if we should adopt it as our faith and observe it in our practice during the present Congress.

Believing, Mr. Speaker, that the principles and policy enunciated in the resolutions under consideration, if observed in our legislation, will lead to a better and more economical administration and to the certain extinguishment of our national indebtedness when it matures, I shall vote for them. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Indiana finish his time now? He has five minutes remaining and we have eighteen.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we have fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. No, you had fifteen minutes before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was speaking in the unexpired portion of the hour occupied by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I asked the Chair how much time was remaining to the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then, how much have gentlemen upon the other side now remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fifteen minutes remain to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and eighteen to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to consume the remainder of his time now?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not now.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to these resolutions, and I desire during the brief time that has been allotted to me to give to the members of the House some of the reasons for my opposition to them.

The first resolution asserts a principle which is all right in itself, standing separate and alone, but a principle which there is no more necessity for this House to adopt in the formal manner that is proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] than there is for a man of probity and intregity to carry a placard upon his back reading "I am an honest man."

The man who goes about the country parading his honesty and integrity is a man who ought to be watched; and the Congress that starts out before it is fairly organized with the adoption of a resolution declaring that it is going to be an honest Congress and an economical Congress, is one that it will be well for the people of this country to watch. If the gentleman who presented these resolutions meant nothing but a declaration of principle in the first resolution, all well and good; but if by that he meant to cast any reflections upon the late Republican Congress, then I hurl back his insinuation with scorn and contempt.

No argument that has been indulged in by the gentleman on that side against the so-called billion-dollar Congress has pointed out a single appropriation that was either unjust in itself or extravagant from an economical standpoint; and I defy any gentleman upon that side to specify any appropriations that were made by the Fifty-first Congress that fair dealing and honest statesmanship will not indorse. I oppose these resolutions in the form presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], because there is no more relation or logical connection between the first resolution and the second than there is between the second resolution and the Lord's Prayer or the Ten Commandments. The first resolution recites that no bounties or money or subsidies should be granted for private purposes.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in all the history of this country the learned author of this resolution can not point to a Congress that has ever taken money from the public Treasury and appropriated it for private and special purposes. In the argument which he made to the members of this House during the early stages of this day's session he said something about public lands; but, Mr. Speaker, as was stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], the first great leader in appropriations of this kind was the idol of the Democracy and is the idol of the Democracy to-day, the late Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois. And one of the most eloquent advocates of appropriations of that kind was the late Vice-President Hendricks, of Indiana. I remember, Mr. Speaker, in the Forty-ninth Congress hearing a Representative from Illinois, Col. Morrison, one of the ablest and most honest Democratic Representatives that ever held a seat upon this floor, defend these appropriations upon the ground that the exigencies of the country at that time demanded that such appropriations should be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] to yield a minute more.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I will yield one minute more.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I oppose the second resolution because it is misleading to the members of this House. During the last Congress, with a unanimity that I have scarcely ever seen in any legislation during my experience in Congress, provision was made for a great World's Columbian Exposition at the city of Chicago in 1893. Under that the President of the United States has been authorized to and has extended an invitation to all of the great powers of the world to participate in that marvelous enterprise.

If these resolutions are passed, no man who votes for them can vote for any appropriations to carry on that exhibit, or even to keep up the incidental expenses that the Government has already assumed. And I wish to warn the members from the State of Illinois and the great Northwest, and all over the country, who take a national pride in this the greatest enterprise of the present age, that they can not afford to vote for these resolutions if they expect to give Government aid to this Exposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA].

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, the explanation given by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to-day destroys somewhat my interest in these resolutions. If they are not intended as a declaration of policy, anticipating and precluding every form of legislation which carries a dollar of appropriation for any purpose except the mere routine conduct of the Departments, they are scarcely worth much attention even as buncombe. But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the candid scrutiny of the House to them. They either mean nothing or they preclude consideration of the matters mentioned in them. Let me read the first few lines:

> That, in the judgment of this House, the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress, in money, public lands, bonds, or by indorsement, or by pledge of the public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises of corporations, independent of the question of the constitutional power of Congress to make such grants, is unjust and impolitic, and in manifest conflict with the spirit of our republican institutions.

Mr. Speaker, why not only the matters enumerated in this resolution, but all matters granting anything, with the understanding that the constitutional power of Congress is against the spirit of our republican institutions? And, sir, with the solemn gravity of declaring that whatever is unconstitutional is against our institutions, yet the gentleman from Indiana says we are all schoolmasters.

But, sir, passing the confusion of thought and language that is in this resolution, what does it mean? Is it, as has been said, an attack upon the sugar bounties?

Why, Mr. Speaker, that is removed from controversy in this House, or from peril now in this body. That is triumphant. If you wish to bring it into controversy it must be before a different assize than this House of Representatives. As has been said, there is no effort, or will be no effort, to grant any public lands to any corporation for private, or may be for any purpose. I submit that that is a mere echo of a long time dead thing. Let it rest. Is there, then, anything in the resolution? It may be, as has been said, antagonizing in anticipation any subsidy or grant of aid to the Nicaragua Canal. If so, I do not think that you could unite even Democrats on that line; you should not unite anybody. Do you want to preclude its very consideration? Mr. Speaker, the section of country I represent has a very strong sentiment in favor of that question. The Chamber of Commerce of the city of San Francisco, composed of both Republicans and Democrats, has memorialized Congress to grant aid to that canal. Now, without saying it is a proper policy, or a bad policy, I do say they are entitled to consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I tried to elicit yesterday by an inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana what these resolutions mean, but was cut off by parliamentary law. To-day he makes an explanation at which everybody must wonder. Is it possible, gentlemen, that it is indispensable to make the Democratic policies obscure? One of your great leaders has warned you against finessing, pointing that when you go to the voter he looks for sincere and honest dealing, and looks for plain and true dealing. Why do your leaders not quit finessing and tell us distinctly and clearly what their policy is?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCKENNA. I had not got through. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. DOLLIVER].

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I will not undertake to add a word to the defense of the last Congress, and to the statement of the condition of the Treasury, which have been so fully set forth by my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON], and by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Since I have been here I have never seen the knife of legitimate criticism so thoroughly applied to the windbag of cheap declamation on the fiscal affairs of the Government. The exposure made to-day of the concerted attack upon the "billion-dollar Congress," incited by the Democratic press, has been so complete that, for the future the phrase will hardly be accepted as an epithet, much less as an argument, among thinking people.

The party that expects to convince the American people by writing "billion-dollar Congress" on the fences and housetops, after the manner of patent-medicine advertisements, occupies an intellectual level obviously below the average intelligence of the public. Everybody knows the important appropriation bills in the last Congress were unanimously reported from careful committees, in which the party in power had only a bare majority. Nor in any debate on these measures did any Democratic member point out any specific act of waste or improvidence. No Democratic newspaper, since the adjournment of that Congress, has been candid enough to name the item in these appropriation bills that is objectionable on the score of extravagance. The two hours consumed to-day by zealous Democratic eloquence, enlisted in the cause of retrenchment, has not brought to the surface a single section in these bills open to partisan attack on the ground of prodigal expenditure. Nobody denies that the allowance for public expenses made by the last Congress was largely in excess of the allowance of the Fiftieth Congress. But, leaving out the pension appropriations, the excess of the Fifty-first Congress over the Fiftieth is not so great as the excess of the Fiftieth over the Forty-ninth.

Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Forty-ninth Congress	$746,342,495.51
Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Fiftieth Congress	817,963,859.80
Increase Fiftieth over Forty-ninth Congress	71,621,364.29
Increase in appropriations for pensions by Fiftieth over Forty-ninth Congress	9,789,700.00
Net increase for ordinary expenses	61,831,664.29
Total regular annual and permanent appropriations Fifty-first Congress	988,417,189.34
Increase Fifty-first over Fiftieth Congress	170,453,323.54
Increase in appropriations for pensions by Fifty-first over Fiftieth Congress	113,312,351.69
Net increase for ordinary expenses	57,140,971.85

This is a country that expands in all the directions of growth. It is not surprising that the cost of the Government should increase from Congress to Congress. It would be unaccountable if did not. The people of the United States care more for the way this Congress spends money than for the amount it spends. There are economies that do not save, and no wise and useful expenditure is a waste.

As might be expected, the only point in the appropriations of the last Congress that has been dignified by the Democratic press with the statement of a specific and tangible complaint is the provision for the payment of pensions. Congress had scarcely enacted the law of June 27, 1890, before the whole pack of prejudice and malice was in full cry against the pension system. The total increase in all departments by the Fifty-first Congress over the Fiftieth was $170,453,323.54, and of that sum $113,000,000 was the increased provision for the comfort of the surviving veterans of the Union Army.

I have studied with some attention the origin and significance of this outcry against the Fifty-first Congress. It comes from the great centers of wealth and business where avarice and greed are teaching men to despise the claims of those who in their age and infirmity need the help of the nation which their service preserved. If you will take up the New York Herald, a leading organ of Democratic opinion, you will find that it keeps standing upon its editorial page a daily advertisement of the Democratic displeasure over the appropriation of enough money to keep the wolf from the door of the men and the women who were faithful in the years of the national disaster. Though the paragraph usually appears just beneath the time-worn exhortation "never print a paid advertisement as news," one who has read it daily for nearly two years is almost tempted to consider it as an advertisement masquerading as news under pay from the treasury of partisan hatred. The item is as follows:

The expenditures for pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, as now officially stated, amounted to $124,415,951.40. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, we paid $109,357,534, while in the year before that we paid $87,644,779.11. In the last ten years our pension payments have amounted to $776,282,100.07. The cost of the German army, it may be interesting to note, is for this year estimated at $80,979,733. Besides our pensions our Army costs over $30,000,000.

Without stopping to examine these figures, I will give this Democratic newspaper credit for a candor and fairness not visible in the statement of the Democratic grievance here to-day, a candor that openly avows the only authentic ground of Democratic complaint against the appropriation bills of the last Congress. And without stopping to argue the pension question, I will only say that we make no apology either here or elsewhere for that splendid act of gratitude which, at least in some meager sense, has placed the national abundance between the remnant of the Union army and the approaching burdens of age and poverty.

If this is not the true ground of the Democratic complaint, what is it? It is not directed against the Post-Office Department. The entire business community recognizes the growing needs of that Department, now nearly self-supporting, and no expenditure of money which improves the postal facilities and brings the conveniences of a rapid and reliable mail service to the people of the United States is open to fair objection. At the present moment popular opinion is demanding a cheaper postage, an extension of free delivery, and a variety of reforms wholly inconsistent with a policy of niggardly appropriations.

I am in favor of every reasonable economy, but not of a paltry scheme of parsimony to the detriment of the public service. The complaint is not directed against the increase of the naval appropriations of the last Congress. It is true that the maturing obligations of the Navy Department, left over from the acts of preceding Congresses, and the construction of suitable vessels for coast defense, expanded the appropriations for the naval establishment in the last Congress; but I venture to say that few men with a true appreciation of the national situation and a ready sense of the national dignity, regret the increase of that expenditure or desire to abate the policy which seeks to provide for our coasts an adequate defense, and for our citizens and interests abroad an adequate protection.

While we ought not to seek the doubtful glories of war with the weak and troubled republics of the South, yet we must not abandon the measures which aim to equip our Navy with the improved implements of modern warfare. The traditions of the United States coming down from the past and the interests of the country looking far into the future equally require us to maintain at least the naval strength that will exempt our seamen in foreign ports from brutal assault and the flag of our legations in foreign capitals from insult.

The Democratic party is not complaining about our extravagance in the improvement of rivers and harbors. The most of that appropriation went to the great rivers of the South, and millions at one stroke to an artificial harbor in Texas. I am not prepared to say that any portion of it was a waste of public money. I only know that those of us in the last House who thought so could not find enough sympathizers in that body to get a division on the question of passing the bill.

Nor are they complaining on account of the provision of public buildings in the prosperous cities of the country for the convenience of the courts and the transaction of the business of the United States Government. The chosen apostles of economy on both sides of this Chamber were personally concerned in that alleged raid on the Treasury. I agree perfectly with that portion of the resolutions which declares against subsidies to "special private enterprises." Nobody has ever proposed to aid by cash or credit any enterprise not evidently of a public character and of evident national importance. Even the bounty given by the last Congress to the producers of sugar was given on the ground that the creation of that great agricultural industry is of vast and unquestionable public benefit, and especially to the West. If that bounty is objectionable, let the Democratic majority of this House move for its repeal, and, as has been said in this debate, they may find Republican coöperation enough to remove the law from the statute book.

I am disposed to question the wisdom of the second resolution, because I believe it will tend to cripple the freedom of this House in dealing with great enterprises not strictly within the scope of the various fixed departments of the public service, that are entitled to the generous consideration of the people and of this House. I am glad that my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has referred to the Columbian Exposition, an enterprise that would at least be prejudiced by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. Randall, in the debate in the Forty-fourth Congress, to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has called our attention, made an express exception in favor of the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. The terms of the resolutions then pending enabled him to do that.

We ought not to bind ourselves in any way that will embarrass us in dealing with the new and urgent demands of the public service, or with the great public interests with which the American people are concerned. The explanations that have been drawn from the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee go far to remove these objections. But we are dealing with his resolutions and not with his speeches. So that, while I indorse the first resolution, and am in favor of every reasonable economy in the management of the public funds, I am opposed to this cunning method of advertising the faded virtues of the Democratic party, and am constrained to vote against the resolutions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN said: Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to discuss this resolution in the short time allotted to me. I rise simply to express my admiration for the sublime faith and the magnificent magnitude of the bump of hope of m friend from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], who, after stating the deplorable condition of his constituency, said he should come to the Democratic party for relief. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Why, my friend, do you not know that the Democratic party never yet relieved anybody? Are you not aware that only the other day, when we proposed that $100,000 should be appropriated to procure ships to carry the provisions already contributed by our generous people to the suffering poor of Russia, the Democratic party could not be depended upon for even that amount of relief to their poor starving fellow-men across the sea?

Why, if it could even relieve itself of its record of iniquities made within the last thirty years, it would accomplish a task greater than that of Samson when he pulled down the pillars of the temple, or Hercules when he cleared out the filth of the Augean stables.

I say again, whom has the Democratic party relieved? To the rescue of what class of our countrymen has it come? What American industry has it favored? When have the workingmen of the country found it a friend? Point me to the statute which it has enacted in the interest of the farmer, the mechanic, or the merchant; refer me to the measure which it has formulated and advocated for the benefit of the American people. You can not designate one.

From the inception of the rebellion in 1861 to this hour the Democratic party has not framed a bill, it has not moved a measure, it has not championed a principle of great national scope that is to-day a law of this country.

On the contrary, almost if not quite all the laws which have been enacted during this generation, which the people have found to be wise and beneficent, have been passed in spite of the determined and stubborn opposition of the Democratic party.

I invite my friend from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] in his own time, to show me one patriotic measure now a law of the land of which the Democratic party can claim paternity.

Why, sir, the Democratic party for twenty-five years has stood in the objective case both in Congress and the country, finding fault with everything, misrepresenting everything which a great, wise, patriotic party has done, and finally catching up with the train, after lagging in the rear for a few years, and driven by events to reluctantly get on and ride with us in the cars that they had vainly endeavored to throw off the track. But it is a hard party to please. How long is it since you were arraigning us gentlemen for holding a large surplus in the Treasury, which you declared should be sent out to circulate among the people? Did you not arraign us for having a plethoric Treasury?

Did not your orators in 1884 reproach the Republican party for having, as they falsely declared, $400,000,000 of the people's money in the Treasury, and does not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and other gentlemen, who were in the Forty-ninth Congress, remember the humiliating silence of gentlemen on the other side of the House when the falsity of this charge was shown?

And now you are grieved that the Treasury is not plethoric, and by garbled quotations from reports and misrepresentation of facts and figures, seek to impress upon the country that we are on the verge of bankruptcy.

Will the time ever come when the Democratic party will not see its best hope of success in the people's misfortunes and the country's distress; when it will not predict calamity with an emphasis which shows how much it is like the old grave digger, who hoped for the cholera to come and give him business.

I am thankful that I belong to a party which can see its own success in the country's prosperity, and never expects to climb to power up the ladder of the people's misfortunes.

But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], referring to our tariff legislation, I presume, says that England and Germany have fattened upon our system of subsidies. Did the gentleman never think how England and Germany and other foreign countries would fatten at our expense should his policy of revenue tariff, that is, free trade in common parlance, be adopted by our Government?

He would hoist the gates and let the products of the pauper labor of the Old World flow freely in upon us, compete with the products of our own working men, our farmers and mechanics, reduce their income to a mere pittance, or drive them into idleness and poverty. It is in order that England and Germany and other countries shall not fatten at our expense that we have provided a way to so raise our revenues as to protect the labor and industries of our own people.

But one word more as to the bankruptcy of the Treasury. We received the Government from the Democratic party in 1861 with its Treasury depleted and its credit so poor that it borrowed money with difficulty at 12 per cent interest. We turned it over to the Democracy in 1885, after we had administered it for twenty-four years, with a full Treasury, and notwithstanding we had taken it through a great civil war, having a credit not surpassed by that of any nation on the globe.

Its debt, $2,756,000,000 in 1865, has been reduced to eight hundred millions, and the $125,000,000 which we are paying as pensions is offset by an equal amount which we have saved in annual interest upon the public debt.

There is no page in the record of the Republican party which we fear to read to ourselves or to others, and there is none in the country's history brighter than that which relates its transactions and honors its name.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in so much of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] as expressed an approval of wise and judicious expenditures of the people's money, and I can assure him we are joined by this entire side of the House. But the general tenor of the gentleman's remarks indicates that he could not have read the resolution which is under consideration.

The resolution simply opposes—

The granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress in money or public lands, etc., to promote special private industries or enterprises of corporations, etc.

I shall vote for the resolution. The gentleman and his party friends will oppose it, because the granting of such subsidies and bounties has been the general occupation of the Republican party. [Laughter on the Democratic side]. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. MILLIKEN] said that the Democratic party had never relieved anybody. Sir, the Democratic party has never robbed anybody, and the Republican party in its entire career has enacted legislation which has robbed the poor people of our land. [Laughter and cheers on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] said he hurled back our charges regarding his billion-dollar Congress with scorn and contempt; the people, "six million of them" hurled back your action in that Congress with scorn and contempt last November. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The people then expressed an opinion similar to that which is embodied in these resolutions. We denounce that action of yours in the last Congress, and we on this side of the House pledge ourselves to all the people that such criminal waste of their money shall never be repeated.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] asked what measures of the Fifty-first Republican Congress had been criticised by the country. I can not go over all the profligate expenditures of that remarkable body, but I will take time to mention two stupendous frauds which have been very generally criticised. One was the subsidy gift by the Republican party of about $15,000,000 a year to the steamship companies to increase the fortunes of some of the millionaires of our country, many of whom have become millionaires by means of the corrupt legislation of the Republican party.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir; for one question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to ask the gentleman whether in his early days, when we liked him better than we do now, he was not in favor of that legislation, and whether he did not afterwards change front?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I never was in favor of any bill which sought to draw money by taxation from the people of our land and donate it to rich corporations, and that has been the practical working of the bill, which is one of the measures sought to be denounced by the resolution under consideration.

I have never advocated subsidies under any form. I have always opposed them in my speeches and votes on this floor.

The contemplation of our decayed, dying, and almost dead merchant marine has given me sorrow and pain, and I have and I always will advocate the enactment of laws which will restore our proud and honored flag to the ocean; but I contend that this can best be done by the repeal of the laws passed by Republicans, which destroyed our shipping, and not by the method espoused by them of taking the people's money to endow and enrich the Pacific Mail and other great steamship companies.

During the closing hours of the last Congress this law was enacted and this enormous donation of the people's hard-earned money to enrich favorites of the Republican party was made without one word of debate.

I read from page 3504, RECORD of the Fifty-first Congress, second session:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, with instructions to report forthwith the following which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. Cannon then said, page 3505:

I am compelled upon that motion to move the previous question.

The bill was not recommitted to the committee, but was instanter illegally reported back to the House by the chairman.

The Speaker [Mr. REED] ruled that this was all right, although four years previously (July 10, 1886) he made a strong argument directly opposing this position.

The Speaker [Mr. REED] also ruled that the point of order would not lie against that part of the resolution which fixed a time for the report to be made, although he ruled exactly the contrary when Mr. BLAND offered a resolution directing that the pawnbroker silver bill be recommitted and that the Committee on Coinage be instructed to report back a free-coinage bill, at the same time fixing the next Tuesday as the time for the report to be made.

Again the Speaker ruled that the subsidy bill was privileged, which was entirely without authority. All these extraordinary rulings were necessary to enact this law, which it is the duty of the Democratic party to, if possible, repeal. Another law which we denounce is the so-called land-forfeiture bill, the real purpose of which appeared to be, so far as lay in their power, to give and confirm a grant of over 40,000,000 acres of land to the Northern Pacific Railroad. This the Speaker accomplished by refusing to recognize questions of privilege and actually directing the bringing up of the bill while a member was on the floor demanding to be heard upon a question of privilege; the Speaker turns away and says:

The Chair desires to recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER]. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allowed me I do not propose to discuss the financial condition of the country, nor am I disposed to debate any other proposition than simply the propriety or impropriety of adopting these resolutions. That they contain a declaration of principle which commands the respect of both sides of this House is, I think, evidenced by the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has introduced a substitute embracing almost the very same declaration contained in the resolutions of my eminent friend from Indiana. These resolutions embody a declaration in behalf of the people which it has been customary to make in former times—one which commends itself by the simplicity of its language.

To the first resolution I suppose not a single member of this House can object. It declares in substance that the expenditures of this Government should be made in accordance with the great principle laid down by the founder of the Democratic party, Thomas Jefferson—"equal and exact justice to all, special favors to none." [Applause.] This first resolution can certainly excite no opposition in the breast of any Democrat on this floor.

As to the second resolution, so far as it declares that no appropriation should be made except in a frugal and economical spirit, I give it my hearty subscription. But, sir, with entire respect for the gentleman from Indiana, whose service in this Hall I have witnessed for so many long years and whose faithful adherence to the public interests has distinguished him in every Congress of which he has been a member, I may be permitted to say that the concluding clause of the second resolution proposing to restrict appropriations to such as may be needed for economical expenditures in each department of the Government is rather too narrow in its phraseology, and should be amended so as to embrace every good public purpose that looks to the advancement of the interests of the country. [Applause.]

I believe it is the desire of my honorable friend, the author of these resolutions, to broaden the scope of the second resolution, so that it may not be subject to criticism—unjust criticism, as it will probably prove to be when the gentleman shall have made further explanations—as to what is meant by the term "department." So far as the resolution implies that our appropriations should be limited to what is absolutely necessary for the annual expenses of each department of the Government, I am satisfied that my friend from Indiana, in order to meet the views of his friends on this side of the House, should broaden the language of the resolution so that it may not hamper any future action which it may be desired to take in such direction as I have indicated. I believe that my friend from Indiana, if the House will allow a reconsideration of the matter, will be willing to amend the proposition so as to meet the views of every member on this side of the Chamber and, I think, every liberal man on the other side.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allowed me I desire simply to say to the Democratic side of this House that I can not vote for this resolution as it stands. I think that if such a proposition as this were submitted in a court of justice any lawyer would be disposed to file a motion to make it more definite and certain. I see nothing in the resolution except a disposition to require of the members of this House collateral security that they will do what they ought naturally to do without any such resolution. I have not been in the habit of signing pledges for the accommodation of anybody. I represent a constituency that expects me to vote independently and right on every bill; and why I should "resolute" now what I will or will not do in the future, seems to me as useless folly. For that reason I object to the resolution.

As to the theatrical part of this proceeding, which has occupied the principal part of this afternoon in the making of stump speeches upon the two sides of the House, I have no interest. But I do seriously object to this resolution as it now stands, and I shall vote against it, as I think every other independent man should do, unless it shall be properly amended before coming to a final vote.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will occupy only a moment of the time which is left, in entering a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered. That motion, if made at all, should, I presume, be made to-day. I enter the motion out of abundant caution. I hope the House will now adjourn, as it is quite late; and if it is found desirable to make the language of the second resolution any more specific than it now is, action for that purpose can come up for consideration to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. We can not hear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana will suspend until the House comes to order.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I could not hear the statement of the gentleman from Indiana correctly, and I think other members are in the same condition. Do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana entered a motion to reconsider?

Mr. HOLMAN. My statement was that out of abundant caution I would enter a motion to reconsider the vote ordering the main question, and will determine by to-morrow morning, if the House should now adjourn, whether I will withdraw or press that motion.

Mr. REED. The gentleman withdraws for repairs? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask unanimous consent before the House adjourns that gentlemen who have made remarks on this pending question may be permitted to extend them in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move that the House do now adjourn, but will ask permission first to introduce a bill for reference. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the motion to adjourn would cut off the opportunity the gentleman seeks.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will not make the motion to adjourn, but ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to admit all wool free of duty, and to repeal the duty per pound and per square yard on woolen goods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the introduction of the bill for reference?

Mr. OWENS. I object, unless the motion to adjourn is not pressed, so that we may dispose of this other matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House executive and other communications of the following titles; which were severally read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

CONTRACTS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statements of contracts entered into by the various bureaus of the War Department for the year ending June 30, 1891—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The documents accompanying this communication are very voluminous, and the Chair has taken the liberty, with the consent of the House, of directing that the documents be not printed unless hereafter ordered. That will be a matter for consideration by the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, to which the letter, with accompanying documents, is referred.

UPPER COLUMBIA AND SNAKE RIVERS.

Also, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Chief of Engineers, suggesting that the limits of the appropriation for the improvement of Upper Columbia and Snake Rivers be extended to include the Snake River, to Asotin—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Also, a letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the following causes, namely: Thaddeus Collard, Simeon Gilbreath, Furneyfold Mercer, Joseph L. Walls, H. M. Withers, deceased, H. T. Woody, G. W. Yuckley—to the Committee on War Claims.

WASHINGTON AND ARLINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Also, a letter from the president of the Washington and Arlington Railway Company, transmitting a statement of its receipts and disbursements from February 28 to December 31, 1891—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Also, a letter from the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, transmitting a report of the names of all the stockholders and the amount of stock held by each, together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the year ending December 31, 1891—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

A bill (S. 636) for the relief of Chester B. Sweet, of California—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 800) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas certain lands therein—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 625) to grant to the State of Oregon townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, for a public park—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 875) for the relief of Thomas Guineau—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 386) to provide for the disposal of Fort Hartsuff, Fort Sheridan, and Fort McPherson military reservations, in the State of Nebraska, to actual settlers, under the provisions of the homestead laws—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By unanimous consent, bills of the following titles were severally introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

HEIRS AND REPRESENTATIVES OF CERTAIN SOLDIERS.

By Mr. NEWBERRY: A bill (H. R. 3850) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of certain soldiers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SPELLING SCHOOL, WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION, ETC.

By Mr. NEWBERRY: A bill (H. R. 3851) to test and try the science of spelling and to provide for the establishing one hundred schools for that purpose and to establish a spelling school in the World's Columbian Exposition to be held in Chicago in 1893.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that this bill embraces matters which might give jurisdiction either to the Committee on the World's Columbian Exposition or to the Committee on Education. The gentleman who introduced the bill has indicated his desire to have it go to the Committee on Education.

Mr. REILLY. Would it not more properly go to the Committee on the World's Columbian Exposition, under the special order of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that it might go to either of the committees. It is for the purpose of correcting the method of spelling; and not only that, but it embraces also a proposition for a $30,000 appropriation for an experimental school in the World's Columbian Exposition.

Mr. REILLY. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the World's Columbian Exposition.

The motion was agreed to.

FREE SPOOL-THREAD OF COTTON.

By Mr. ELLIS: A bill (H. R. 3872) placing spool-thread of cotton on the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT OCONTO, WIS.

By Mr. LYNCH: A bill (H. R. 3873) to appropriate money for the improvement of the harbor at Oconto, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SECTION 3480 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 3874) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GRADES OF OFFICERS OF THE MARINE CORPS.

By Mr. RUSK: A bill (H. R. 3875) to equalize the grades of officers of the Marine Corps—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THE LATE HON. W. H. F. LEE.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, February 6, beginning at 1 o'clock afternoon, be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. William Henry Fitzhugh Lee, late a member of the House of Representatives from the Eighth district of the State of Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The motion was put, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WARWICK obtained leave of absence for two weeks.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers and court-martial record in the case of Bvt. Col. T. P. O'Reilly.

R. 3876) to prohibit the interstate transportation of trees, plants, vines, or other nursery stock infested with scale insects, or codling moths, or other pests, or with their eggs or larvæ, or infected with any disease injurious to trees, plants, and vines, and the importation into the United States from any foreign country of any thereof so affected; to provide for penalties for violations thereof, and defining the duties of certain departments of the United States with relation thereto; which was read the first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. CAMINETTI also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3877) to create and provide for a bureau of correspondence for the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Accounts.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 430) making appropriations for the purchase of ground, and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records;

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the city of Chamberlain, in Brulé County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota; and

A bill (S. 1374) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this House, the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress, in money, public lands, bonds, or by indorsement, or by pledge of the public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises of corporations, independent of the question of the constitutional power of Congress to make such grants, is unjust and impolitic, and in manifest conflict with the spirit of our republican institutions, as it directly tends to create and foster the wealth of favored classes at the expense of the whole people who bear the burdens of government, and manifestly furnishes undue facilities for the enlargement of great private estates—a policy which a government of the people can not justly or safely encourage by any form of favoritism in legislation.

Resolved, In view of the present condition of the Treasury, and because efficient and honest government can only be assured by the frugal expenditure of the public money, while unnecessary and lavish expenditure, under any and all conditions, leads inevitably to venal and corrupt methods in public affairs, no money ought to be appropriated by Congress from the public Treasury except such as is manifestly necessary to carry on the several Departments frugally, efficiently, and honestly administered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, last evening I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question had been ordered. On reflection, if I am authorized to do so under the rules, I desire to withdraw that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask for that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair gives as a reason for that opinion, that, as yesterday was the last day on which the motion to reconsider could be entered, there might be a question as to whether it should be entered after withdrawn by other members. If the mover of the resolution were permitted yesterday to enter the motion and to withdraw it without unanimous consent to-day, other members might be deprived of the opportunity to move to reconsider. So that the Chair is inclined to the opinion that it should be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman from Indiana is to withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered on the resolution.

There was no objection, and the motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions. The gentleman from Indiana has one minute remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to occupy that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only minute, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to occupy half of that in saying that after careful reëxamination of this second resolution, and after consulting with gentlemen whose judgments are entitled to very great respect, I have reached the conclusion, for myself at least, that the resolution is broad enough to permit any and all proper and legitimate legislation for carrying on the Government.

Mr. REED. Like the Chicago Fair appropriation?

Mr. HOLMAN (continuing). Including all such legislation as private pension bills and the like. Those matters all come from or are adjusted through the Departments. The great Departments of the Government embrace the whole field of governmental legislation for the administration of public affairs, and for this reason I have asked to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman specify any matter or thing that these resolutions of his cut off—anything for which appropriations were made by the last Congress, and which can not be appropriated for under these resolutions?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I would like to vote for the first resolution, but not for the second; and my inquiry is, can these resolutions be divided?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the proposition is divisible. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] demands a division, and the question is on the first resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask whether, under the ruling of the Chair that the House is now acting under common parliamentary law, a motion to commit with instructions to report the substitute which I endeavored to have considered yesterday would be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be in order but for the fact that one motion to commit was entertained after the demand for the previous question. The practice of the House has been to allow a motion to recommit either before or after the previous question is ordered. In this case, even after the previous question was demanded, the Chair entertained a motion of the gentleman from Louisiana for that purpose; hence the Chair thinks that motion can not now be duplicated.

Mr. DINGLEY. Would not a motion to commit with instructions be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The adding of instructions would not add to the right, in the opinion of the Chair. The question is on the adoption of the first resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, on the suggestion of my friend, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I withdraw my demand for a division of the resolutions.

Mr. TRACEY. I renew the demand.

Mr. LYNCH. I demand a separate vote on the resolutions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH] demands a division of the proposition, and the question is on the first resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think, Mr. Speaker, we had better have this part of the performance read again for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has just been read, but if there be no objection it will be again reported by the Clerk in order that the House may know exactly the proposition on which the vote is to be first taken.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again read the first resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HEARD. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 228, nays 40, not voting 63; as follows:

The following were announced as paired, for this day:

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. WARWICK with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. BARWIG. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. BRICKNER] is absent on account of illness, and I ask indefinite leave of absence for him.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYNUM). The question is on the second resolution.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute for the second resolution at this time.

Mr. LODGE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The question is on the second resolution.

Mr. HEARD. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 164, nays 95, not voting 72; as follows:

So the second resolution was adopted.

Mr. BABBITT. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. COBURN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I wish to state that my colleagues from Virginia, Mr. LAWSON and Mr. LESTER, are absent from the House by reason of serious sickness.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. CAUSEY, on this question.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there has been great confusion in the House during the roll-call I ask that the vote be recapitulated.

The roll-call having been recapitulated, the result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the votes by which the two resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, when the vote was taken on the first of the resolutions which have just been adopted I was necessarily absent, visiting the Departments in the interests of my constituents. I desire to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman that it is too late.

Mr. WINN. Then I will say, Mr. Speaker, that if I had been present I should have voted "ay."

SWEARING IN A MEMBER.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that Judge Fyan, a member elect from the State of Missouri, is now present in his seat and ready to be sworn in. As he is unable on account of lameness to come down the aisle for that purpose, I ask that the oath be administered to him in his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Judge Fyan, who is crippled and unable to come down in front of the Clerk's desk, may be sworn in at his seat. If there be no objection that will be done.

There was no objection; and the oath of office was accordingly administered to Mr. R. W. Fyan, the member elect from the State of Missouri.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. PARRETT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3878) for the improvement of the Ohio River between the mouth of the Green River, in the State of Kentucky, and the city of Evansville, in the State of Indiana, and to appropriate $100,000 therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS TO HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Mr. RUSK. I call up the special order, being the report of the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report of the majority of the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of the House (passed on the 7th instant) authorizing and directing said committee to designate the committees of the House to which the clerks provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, should be allowed and assigned for the present Congress, and to report by resolution to the House for its action thereon, respectfully report that they have examined into and considered said matter, and report to the House and recommend the passage of the following resolution, namely:

Resolved, That the thirty-seven clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, be, and they are hereby, allowed and assigned for the present Congress to the following-named committees, namely:

To the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk.
To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Territories, a clerk.
To the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk.
To the Committee on Manufactures, a clerk.
To the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, a clerk.
To the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, a clerk.
To the Committee on Education, a clerk.
To the Committee on Labor, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Militia, a clerk.
To the Committee on Patents, a clerk.
To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, two (assistant) clerks.
To the Committee on Pensions, a clerk.
To the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, a clerk.
To the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings and Grounds, a clerk.
To the Committee on Accounts, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Library, a clerk.
To the Committee on Printing, a clerk.
To the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk.
To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Eleventh Census, a clerk.
To the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, a clerk.
To the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, a clerk.
To the Committee or Immigration and Naturalization, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Columbian Exposition, a clerk.
To the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, a clerk.

Also resolved, That the pay of the clerks to committees of the House of Representatives which have been or may be hereafter authorized by the House who are paid during the session only shall begin from the time such clerks entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of the several committees employing clerks for the session only.

HARRY WELLES RUSK.
JOHN A. QUACKENBUSH.
A. J. PEARSON.
JOHN T. CUTTING.
GEORGE W. COOPER.
C. L. MOSES.

Mr. RUSK (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, as this report, together with that of the minority, has already been printed in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading.

There being no objection, the further reading was dispensed with.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of the views of the majority of the committee as embodied in this report, I will state that we found upon an examination of the appropriation laws that twenty committees of this House are provided with annual clerks, leaving some thirty-eight to be provided with session clerks. Of these thirty-eight committees, one, the Committee on Rules, does not request a clerk. In regard to the Committee on Mileage, we found that the duties of that committee have already been performed, and there is no other business likely to be referred to it. At some subsequent date a resolution will be reported to provide payment for the clerical services rendered up to this time in connection with the work of that committee. For each of the remaining committees, we have provided a clerk, making some thirty-five committees thus provided. We found that, according to precedent, and by reason of the necessities of the case, the Committee on Invalid Pensions requires the assistance of two additional session clerks, the committee already having one annual clerk provided by law. Our report, therefore, assigns the thirty-seven session clerks, and keeps within the clause of the appropriation bill, which provides for thirty-seven session clerks to committees, the law reading "for clerks to committees" to be paid so much per diem "during the session."

The minority of the committee, in submitting their views, while allowing clerks to a number of these committees, omit some, and especially those committees known as the "expenditures committees." I will state here that the majority of the committee, looking to the report of the Committee on Rules, which report was adopted unanimously by the House, took it to be an expression of the sense of this body that these committees were necessary to the transaction of the public business; and knowing from experience that committees are not likely to organize unless they are properly equipped with clerks, we have, in accordance with what we believe to be the sense of the House in that regard, provided these committees with clerks.

Referring to the minority report, especially that portion of it relating to the various committees on expenditures, it will be seen that attention is called to the few reports submitted by these several committees to the House in past years. I would respectfully submit that the importance of a committee is not to be estimated or measured by the number of reports submitted by the committee, but by the scope of its jurisdiction and the importance of the subjects referred to it. We all know that there are committees of this House who have submitted hundreds of reports, which furnish evidence of the industrious character of the members of the committee in consideration of the various claims submitted against the Government; but at the same time there are other committees in this House which make but comparatively a few reports during the session, and yet each one of the reports is the result of months of patient investigation and hard work by the members of the committee. Hence we claim that it is not the number of reports by which the work of the committee or the importance of the committee can be judged, but by the scope of the work committed to it.

But without going further into these matters, Mr. Speaker, at this time, the Committee on Accounts believes itself to be justified in submitting this report in view of the action of the House on the resolution submitted by the Committee on Rules recently, and we respectfully submit, that being the case, we have done right and only right in furnishing the committees authorized by the Committee on Rules each with a clerk, so that they may be organized and prepared to do the work of the session committed to them.

I may have something further to say, and will reserve whatever time I am entitled to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RUSK. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Maryland not know that a number of these committees to which clerks have been assigned do not have more than one meeting during a session, and that meeting merely for the purpose of effecting an organization and appointing a clerk?

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, never having been a member of any such committee, I can not answer the gentleman. As a matter of fact I know that these committees on expenditures have at each session of Congress a report from the various Departments submitted to them, and they certainly have plenty of material on which to work and frame reports if they choose to do so. I can not answer the gentleman's question from personal information, nor do I know from the past what will be done by the committees of this Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I can only say that I was a member of a committee in the last Congress which had but two meetings. The first was to permit the chairman to appoint a clerk, and that chairman having died and a new man appointed, we had a second meeting to permit the new man to appoint a clerk, and not a quorum was present at either meeting. I think many other of the committees are in the same condition. It simply amounts to the assignment of a clerk for the individual convenience of the chairman of the committee. If that is to be done all the other members are equally entitled to clerks.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts to what I think is obviously an omission, unintentional, of course, on the part of the Committee on Accounts in its report. I understood the gentleman from Maryland to say that it was the purpose of the committee to recommend clerks for those committees only that are mentioned by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RUSK. With the exceptions of the Committees on Rules and Mileage.

Mr. HEARD. Very good; that is as I understood it. Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Committee on the District of Columbia, so far as this report shows, is not provided with a clerk; and with the exception of three other committees of this House I do not believe there is another committee which has more work for a clerk to do.

Mr. RUSK. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the Committee on the District of Columbia has an annual clerk provided for by law.

Mr. HEARD. So I understood; and I will say to the House now, in explanation of the inquiry I have just made, that I asked the chairman of the Committee on Accounts if this report specified all the clerks to be provided for during this session, and I understood him to state that it did, except those who were paid for out of the contingent fund and for certain additional clerks to some of the committees. Hence I made the inquiry.

Mr. RUSK. I must have misunderstood the question. I evidently misunderstood it, because there are some twenty clerks who are provided for by the annual appropriation bills, one of them being the clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. That is the reason I asked the gentleman from Maryland the question now, he having evidently misunderstood the question I asked him before this resolution was called up this morning.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, there being some confusion, I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Maryland distinctly, but, as I understand it, you provide for thirty-seven clerks.

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Two of them to go as extra clerks to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. RUSK. That is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. And thirty-five to the other committees.

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. That assignment takes up the entire amount appropriated for this purpose, and no more?

Mr. RUSK. That is correct. The clause of the appropriation bill provides for thirty-seven clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session. We provide for thirty-seven clerks, two being assigned to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentlemen who represent the minority, I ask the attention of the House for a few moments. The minority of that committee believed that the only justification for public expenditure was a public necessity. They believed that when this matter was referred to that committee, it was referred for the purpose of having the committee pass judgment solely upon the necessity for clerks for these various committees. There could have been no other object or purpose involved in the reference. The salaries of these clerks were already provided for by law. The number of committees was provided by the rules. The authority to appoint the committees was vested entirely in the several chairmen of these committees. Therefore it would have been idle to have referred this question to the committee, except for the purpose of taking these thirty-seven clerks and placing them where there was some necessity for them.

Now, we find that the Committee on Invalid Pensions needs, in addition to the annual clerk, at least two assistant clerks. And if this committee does not assign these two assistant clerks out of the fund provided in this general appropriation, we will have afterward by special resolution to appoint them and to pay them out of an additional appropriation. So it is the case with all those committees in which there is necessity for greater service than can be rendered by one clerk.

I find that the Committee on Military Affairs, if its work is as great as in the last session, will have about 2,000 bills referred to it. Under the law that committee has but one clerk, and the minority has seen cause to take clerks from some of these other committees that have nothing to do and to assign another to the Committee on Military Affairs. If we had been left to our preference we would gladly have assigned the clerks, in a spirit of courtesy, to the several gentlemen who are chairmen of these committees, but as we were called upon to pass upon the question of necessity we could not afford to do it.

I have been looking into the records made by several of these committees and reported to the document room, and the only evidence of the work that has been done is the record made and filed by the gentlemen who have been at work. I find that in six long years (and I did not go any further back into the record than that; it may have been twelve or more) that the two Committees on Expenditures in the State Department and Expenditures on Public Buildings, have never yet reported to this House upon any subject whatever. And yet they have taken $10,800 of the public money for clerks, in my judgment, purely for what are called by the older members here ornamental committees.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I had the honor of serving on the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department in the Forty-eighth Congress, and I remember that we spent several weeks investigating matters in the State Department, although we did not find it necessary to make a report, but we did a vast amount of work. I mention that as showing that the number of reports filed by a committee is not always a true index of the amount of work performed by that committee.

Mr. DICKERSON. The gentleman has very skillfully placed his time a little beyond the date of the examination I made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] complete his statement by telling us whether the testimony taken by the committee was taken down by the clerk, or by one of the regular stenographers to committees?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. There was no stenographer employed, but the clerk did all the labor.

Mr. DICKERSON. I will give both these gentlemen a part of my time directly. I do not want to talk very long. I find that the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department has never made a report. I find that the list of committees that the minority refuse clerks to, which list is too long to repeat, have made but four or five reports, any of them. In my judgment the record will show that in many instances subjects were assigned to these committees for the solitary purpose of allowing them to make reports, and to put themselves on record as showing some appearance of necessity for a clerk. I find that the Committee on Acoustics and Ventilation have made four reports to this House in six years, and two of them have been a discussion of air ships. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. What subjects could be more appropriate.

Mr. DICKERSON. I do not know but that was appropriate in former Congresses, but I am opposed to it just now. Now, these several committees on expenditures, under the jurisdiction given to them, have only power to investigate the expenditures in these several Departments. There are very few if any bills referred to them. So if they wish to make an investigation, if they desire to ascertain whether the funds set apart to the various Departments have been economically and properly expended, this House has the power to give to those gentlemen ample facilities for making such investigation. We will give them stenographers, and we will give them clerks whenever the necessity for it arises; but to stand here in the face of the record of the past six years, showing that they have done nothing, in the hope that in the future, some time, they may do something, to carry on this long list of clerks at the enormous expense that is shown by this committee is, in my judgment, a simple waste of funds and an utter disregard of the proper rules of economy and honesty in the administration of public affairs.

I know it is a trifling sum, when compared to the vast amounts appropriated by this Congress annullay; but the expenditure of a small sum involves the same moral principles and affords the same opportunity for the application of correct economic rules that the expenditure of a larger sum does; and it is not the amount, but the purposes for which we expend money, that justly arouses the suspicions of the people and excuses the severe criticisms that we see in the daily press. There is no reasons for clerks to these committees until they demonstrate that they desire to make an investigation; and then I for one am willing to give them all the necessary clerical aid, and the assistance of stenographers, that their investigations may require. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I united with the majority in support of the report which has been submitted, and I desire to give the reasons for the course I have taken. I wish to speak more particularly of the committees on expenditures in the several Departments and on public buildings. There are nine of these committees, as follows: On the Department of State, the Treasury Department, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Post-Office Department, the Interior Department, the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, and on Public Buildings.

Section 35 of Rule XI of the rules of the House for the Fiftieth Congress, under which we are now operating, prescribes the powers and duties of these committees. It is as follows:

> The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures, their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the eight standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments, as follows.

Then follows the list of those committees. It is proposed now to deprive these committees on expenditures in the several Departments of clerks.

Mr. Speaker, these committees have been constituted. In my judgment they ought to be fully equipped with all necessary help, and then some work ought to be expected of them. It is not an answer to the proposition to assign clerks to these committees to say that in the past they have not performed their duties.

Mr. Speaker, in my humble judgment the fact that duties have not been performed, that extravagance has not been rebuked, that corruption has not been exposed, that Congress has not been more vigilant and active, may in part explain why it is that expenditures have increased so steadily. We are the antithesis of the "billion-dollar Congress," and it will be expected of us that we inquire into these expenditures; and if we are to inquire into them we should not begin by abolishing the committees constituted for that purpose, or by doing that which is equivalent, refuse to provide them with clerks. Gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, in the discussion of the resolution proposing to pledge the House to economy, and which we have just had under consideration, have demanded that we should specify wherein expenditures have been extravagantly made. They have insisted that we are unable and can not point to a single expenditure that was not honestly made and that can not be defended. They have hurled back our charges of extravagance "with scorn and contempt."

I know of no case, Mr. Speaker, where a more lofty indignation has been manifested or a more earnest protest of virtue has been made save one. It is certainly in the same vein and sounds like the language of Donna Julia:

> "Yes, search and search," she cried,
> "Insult on insult heap, and wrong on wrong!"

[Laughter.]

I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Treasury made this year. In it he calls attention to the expenditures of the several Departments, and I wish to read the figures given by him. It can not be said that the increase as shown is the result of pension legislation or the payment of honest debts, because these figures relate only to the expenditures of the several Departments.

On page 7 of this report I find this language:

> There was an increase of $57,637,198.14 of the ordinary expenditures, as follows.

This increase, Mr. Speaker, was for the year 1891 over the year 1890, an increase of $57,636,198 in the ordinary expenditures of the several Departments for one year. If gentlemen desire specifications of extravagant appropriations let them refer to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and he gives the items. I will not follow down the list showing the increase in the several items, but will give the total.

Mr. DICKERSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DICKERSON. I will ask the gentleman if the investigations of the expenditures of the Departments have been made except by the assistance of a stenographer, and whether there is any special use for a clerk in this connection?

Mr. COOPER. My answer to that would be, that if these investigations should be made, as I insist here that they shall be made, then I am ready to vote for a stenographer. Mr. Speaker, it was my fortune or misfortune to hold a kind of collateral relation during the last Congress to the investigation of one branch of this service.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me a moment, I will suggest that there are stenographers to the committees, appointed for the purpose of being assigned to just such investigations.

Mr. COOPER. There are stenographers, who will be at the command of the chairmen of these committees if occasion for it shall arise.

I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that I held a kind of collateral relation to a committee during the last Congress, whose duty it was to investigate one of the Bureaus of this Government. That committee never finished its work; but we went far enough into it to show that the Commissioner of Pensions appointed his own son to an office which he created for that purpose, and the public knows now that that son during his tenure of office employed his time in selling public places in that department, and that for this offense he has been removed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DICKERSON. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether that investigation was not made by a special committee, and whether the Committee on Expenditures of the Interior Department did not utterly neglect to do any work of that kind?

Mr. COOPER. I am not now discussing how this investigation was made.

Mr. DICKERSON. I understand that.

Mr. COOPER. Nor am I saying that these investigations should not be made by special committees. I am urging upon the House my view as to the necessity for the making of these investigations. I have been asked by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON] whether any investigations have ever been made by these several committees. A proposition similar to the one now made by the gentleman was made in the Forty-ninth Congress. I wish to read from the debate had at that time.

On the proposition to strike out the provision for the clerks of these committees, and in the discussion upon that subject Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, then a member of this House, said:

> I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that these committees constitute the eyes and the hands of the House. In fact, I believe it is claimed in some cases that while they were making these investigations they also constituted the nose or noses of the House, for they were called smelling committees. Be that as it may, a great deal of good has resulted from the work done by them, and I am sure they should not be and will not be abolished.

If the gentleman will refresh his recollection, he will remember that it was these same standing committees on expenditures that so thoroughly overhauled these Departments some years ago and brought to light such and so much malfeasance and corruption as to startle and shock the moral sense of the nation.

Now, whether these committees have at all times performed their duties ably and faithfully I am not here to say, for I do not know; but I do know that there is an ample field for their operations, and that they should perform the duties assigned to them, and if they do perform those duties, certainly they should be properly equipped for the purpose. If we are going to reform the different branches of the administration of this Government in pursuance of the pledges which we made to the people, certainly we can not do it by depriving ourselves of the necessary help, any more than a carpenter can do his work without his tools.

I was about to read a few items showing the increase in the expenditures of the several Departments of the Government for the year 1891 over 1890. In the legislative department, the Department of State, the Treasury Department, the Navy Department, the Interior Department, the Post-Office Department, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the Department of Justice, the Executive proper, the District of Columbia, and the War Department, there was a net increase of $28,644,911. In the military establishment there was a net increase of $4,137,226.93. In the naval establishment there was a net increase of $4,107,690.22. In the Indian service there was a net increase of $1,819,422.34. In pensions there was a net increase of $17,479,096.33. In the interest on the public debt there was an increase of $1,447,851.32; making a total net increase in one year of $57,636,198.14.

Now, Mr. Speaker, anyone who will run up the column of the years and note how steadily the expenditures in the several Departments have grown, until now we seem to have reached the necessity of appropriating in a single term of Congress in the neighborhood of a billion of dollars, will agree that it is necessary that we shall endeavor by some means to ascertain whether these enormous expenditures are really demanded by the wants of the Government.

If we refuse these clerks upon the ground that nothing has been done in the past, it will be equivalent to a declaration that we expect nothing to be done in the future; and so, in the very beginning of the work which we are sent here to do, we lay down our arms and in the name of economy strike a truce with extravagance, and close our eyes against the regular and systematic depredations upon the public Treasury.

No, Mr. Speaker, let us equip these committees with all the necessary agencies to render them efficient, and then let it be understood that we expect from them such action as will enable us to know whether these vast sums are needed and how they are expended.

Mr. DICKERSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words to say about these propositions. I know of no rule to govern the action of this House except the rule of experience. Those things which may happen in the future are matters which do not so much concern us as the things that have happened. Now, it is a little remarkable that gentlemen who represent the majority report give us not a fact, not a principle, in justification of their action, but only say that they felt authorized and deemed it to be their duty to make assignments of clerks to these committees because, and only because, the rules heretofore adopted by this House established and recognized such committees. The minority, on the other hand, seem to have entered into some investigation. Not being on the committee, and hearing no denial of the fact stated by the minority, I assume those facts to be stated correctly.

Now, if it is true in the history of the past six years, or, as the minority suggest, perhaps a longer period, that a number of these committees have done very little work, that one of them at least has made no report, that in the same period others have made one report each, that others have made three reports and others but four reports in six years, I do not see what justification there is for the recommendations of the majority. The reply to this, and the only reply made, is: "You do not look at the result of the work to determine its importance." They say that committees may have neglected their duties, that Congress has been derelict, that we have stood here shamelessly through different administrations and different Congresses and permitted the committees appointed by this House either to have nothing to do, or having much to do, to do nothing, and now we are called upon to perpetuate that state of facts. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the result reached by these committees, the bills they have reported, furnish this House the only safe criterion by which to judge of the importance of the work and of the committees.

Again, Mr. Speaker, however important a committee may be, it does not follow that its work involves clerical aid. The question is not whether a committee is important as a committee, but whether its importance relates in any way to clerical work. What fact have you got, what presumption exists, that because a committee in the future may become important, therefore it is equally important that that committee shall have a clerk? Members of Congress who are appointed upon committees, whether special committees or standing committees in this House, are expected to do something themselves to make investigation, and to do much work in which they do not need and can not use clerical service except perhaps of a special character.

The minority of the committee, as I understand, stated that in the fullness of time if it should be discovered that there is work to be done requiring the services of these clerks, they stand here ready to vote to authorize them; but until that time comes, until there is a reasonable expression on the part of the committee that we need these clerks for immediate, efficient, active service, my judgment is that it is the bounden duty of this Democratic Congress to show, not by mere resolutions, in which I have but little confidence, but by stern individual action, their purpose to do right—not to-morrow, not at some future day, but now. That "now" is pressing us. At the opening of this Congress it behooves us as Democrats not to indulge merely in the adoption of resolutions, but to inaugurate an actual retrenchment of public expenditures.

It is no argument to say that these are small things. We shall be better able to take care of large things in our expenditures and shall be more likely to do so if we begin by meeting properly questions in regard to these small expenditures.

The minority of the committee say—it is not denied and I assume it is true—that under the report of the majority of the committee $27,000 will be expended this session upon committees that have so little to do as not to justify this expense. Should we not assume this statement of the minority of the committee to be true in the absence of any denial? The minority of the committee seem to have gone into this matter in good faith. They have laid before us facts to which we can not well shut our eyes. My judgment is that the minority report ought to be sustained. When the hour comes that the honest chairman of an honest committee reports to this House that he knows such facts to exist as demand the service of a clerk for his committee, I shall be among the very first to vote a clerk for such committee. But until that hour comes it is plain to me that my duty is to vote in favor of withholding this expenditure. I trust that the minority resolution will be adopted by the House.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to occupy unnecessarily the time of the House; but if the report of the minority of the committee were correct, if the views of the minority were in the interest of retrenchment and reform, I, as a representative of that class of people who are known not only as Democrats, but as Alliance men, would have appended my name to the minority report, not the report of the majority. It is because I desire to show this House that the majority report is in the interest of true retrenchment and reform that I venture to call attention to the two reports.

Mr. Speaker, there is a necessity for these committees on expenditures in the Departments; otherwise the House has stultified itself by their creation. If, then, there is a necessity for the formation of the committees, why not equip them, as has been done heretofore, to do the work which the House expects of them? The cause of true retrenchment demands that these committees on the expenditures in the several Departments should each have a clerk, and that those committees should be required to make reports to this House. I respectfully submit that the fact that they did not report in the last Congress is no reason why they should not report in the future. I will read from the report of the minority. They say:

> We should set the example of cutting off expenses in our own department here, and then we shall be in a position to demand economy in the several Departments.

That is what we want. We demand economy in the several Departments, and that is the reason we want these committees on departmental expenditures fully equipped. Your grand juries in your several counties sometimes do not find anything wrong to report, still they make their reports. If these committees on departmental expenditures have not made reports heretofore the presumption is it is because they have found things all right in the way of expenditures; and if so, it is an honor to the administration of the Departments and their respective heads. The people are going to pass upon our expenditures, and they demand of us, as their immediate representatives, to see to it that the expenditures of the different Departments of the Government are not extravagant and are in strict accordance with law.

The proposition to cut off these committees reminds me of the story of the wolves that asked the shepherd to throw the dogs to them. Suppose a request should come from these Departments that we call off these committees on departmental expenditures, would you grant such a request? Why, sir, the only way we can secure retrenchment and reform, the only way we can keep expenditures within what is absolutely necessary, is to let these Departments know that we are prepared to look and will look into every expenditure that may be made.

Mr. Speaker, the small sum spent in equipping these committees for active duty will be well expended. Not only ought we to give them these clerks, but if they do not report we should by resolution of the House call upon them for full report, so that we may know from examination of the facts that the departmental expenditures have been lawful and economical.

Why, sir, we have a United States Navy which is sustained by tremendous appropriations on the part of the Government; but according to the argument of the speech last made there is no necessity for that Navy. The existence of such a navy obviates the necessity which might arise for naval warfare if such a navy did not exist. And we say that the very existence of these committees—the fact that they are ready to do their duty—will have a tendency to check extravagance of expenditure in the Departments, and hence will promote the interests of retrenchment and reform.

Some of us were in favor of cutting off three or four of these other minor committees; but we were not in favor of taking from the Democratic party the ax with which the people expect this Congress to lop off all unnecessary expenditures not only here but in all the Departments of the Government. I am in favor of the report of the majority.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. MOSES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I want to know whether the fact that you belong to the Alliance furnishes any guaranty that you will be more likely than any straight Democrat to report in favor of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. MOSES. I do not think it does—if you mean true Democrat.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the Chair state what is the question pending now before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the parliamentary status is this: The report of the majority of the Committee on Accounts is proposed to be amended by a substitute offered by the minority. That substitute, the Chair is advised, is pending, and the gentleman from Louisiana has offered an amendment to it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has reserved a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BOATNER. What point of order has been reserved against the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know.

Mr. BOATNER. I should be glad to be informed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Indiana in his seat, but is advised that the point of order is to the effect that the amendment is not germane to the substitute.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I rose principally for the purpose of withdrawing the amendment because of the parliamentary difficulties of the situation, and not because I am not perfectly satisfied that the members of this House are as much entitled to clerical assistance in their individual capacity as they are in their aggregate capacity as members of the several committees. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

But, Mr. Speaker, while on my feet I avail myself of the opportunity to remind the House that we are dealing with a momentous question. [Laughter.] We are dealing with a question which has been made momentous by the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana which has just been adopted this morning.

The question arises now for our consideration whether the expenditure we are about to authorize is one which comes under the jurisdiction of the Departments of the Government in any form or shape, and if it does not, whether we are justified in making the expenditure in the face of the declaration adopted this morning that we would make no appropriations except such as are absolutely necessary to carry on the Departments of the Government. [Laughter.] It may be, of course, justified under the plea that Congress is one of the departments of the Government, and I believe the gentleman from Indiana himself on yesterday threw out the comforting assurance to his friends that the words of the resolution did not mean exactly what they said, but embraced the whole system of Government in all of its various branches [laughter] and departments, and that under a liberal construction of the resolution all appropriations for the public service are covered by the words of the resolution.

But, Mr. Speaker, coming back to the question properly before the House at this time, the situation, as I understand it, is just this: The House, in recognition of the fact that certain members of the House are entitled to clerical assistance, restricts the appointment of clerks to members of the House who happen to be chairmen of committees. In other words, the assignment to one of these committees as chairman carries with it a clerkship, and the continuance of this system is opposed. I have observed some very remarkable changes of opinion on this particular question in the minds of members of the House, according to the change of the situation. [Laughter.]

In the last session of Congress I introduced, or rather supported as strongly as I could, a motion made here to extend this kind of clerical assistance to the members of that body, the last House of Representatives. I found a very large number of gentlemen, members at that time, who agreed enthusiastically with the proposition when it was in the Committee of the Whole House for consideration; and there was every reason to suppose that it would find an overwhelming support in the House. But when the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and I believe one or two other distinguished gentlemen who desired to make a record, gave notice that they would call for a vote by yeas and nays in the House, why, sir, it was most astounding what a remarkable change of sentiment occurred between the hours of 2 o'clock and about half past 4 in the afternoon. [Laughter.]

I do not think that there was more than thirty or forty who, when the House resumed its sitting and was considering the report of the Committee of the Whole, had not undergone a remarkable change of sentiment, and even concluded it would be a piece of criminal extravagance which the country could not tolerate and would not justify. [Laughter.] I at that time, Mr. Speaker, was animated by a righteous indignation against these economic gentlemen who had been reëlected and expected to be chairmen of the committees of the next Congress, and who, having supported the question before the Committee of the Whole, changed their sentiments and voted "no" on call of the roll in the House, and I determined when this House met, was organized, and the proposition was made to assign clerks to the various committees, that I would introduce and support a proposition that unless all members are entitled to clerical assistance none of them should have it, and that if I can not have the assistance of a clerk in the conduct of the business which devolves upon me, the chairman of my committee ought not to have one to write his letters, conduct his correspondence, distribute his garden seeds, make his inquiries at the Departments; in other words, to be a man of all work, paid by the Government at $6 a day, while the next man upon the committee has to do that work himself or pay for it out of his private individual pocket. And there is no use in discussing the fact that a very considerable number of the clerks of committees of this House perform those duties for the chairmen of the committees, and absolutely no other duties at all.

But, Mr. Speaker, when the Speakership contest came up here a short time ago, at one time I could see a chairmanship away in the dim distance. It was a long way off and did not materialize. [Laughter.] But, however, I found my mind unconsciously taking a kind of reactionary movement upon the clerkship question [laughter], and I came to the conclusion that it was not such a bad thing after all to allow the chairmen to have clerks; and considering the change of public sentiment upon this question, I hope this House will realize before long that the country is not paying any attention to such trifles as this, and will do justice to itself, will do just as the Senate has done for a long time, assign to its members the necessary clerical assistants to perform necessary duties; that men will realize that the nation is not employing Congressmen at a salary of $5,000 a year to do the work which can be performed by clerks at a salary of $75 or $100 a month. I say, in the hope that this House will do itself justice and will provide itself with the necessary clerical assistants, I shall vote in behalf of the majority report, although I do it with the full knowledge that the assignment of these clerks, in most instances and except to the great committees, is for the individual convenience of the chairmen of the committees. [Applause.]

Mr. SNOW. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this body will not forget that it is a representative body. A large number of the members of this House are sitting here to-day as a protest upon the part of the people against wild and reckless extravagance. I am no sentimentalist. I believe in being liberal, with my own money; but I am opposed to liberality with other people's money. The people of this country have established an agency in this country with headquarters at Washington; we are the direct representatives of the people, and it is the people who are making the demand. If, as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] has said—and I agree with a part of his remarks—the Representatives here on the floor of this House need, as I believe they do, personal clerks, I have the manhood sufficient to stand up here and vote and go on record in favor of it.

The people do not want us to do work which could more properly be done by clerks, but they wish us to devote ourselves to wider and greater subjects. I know many of the members are overworked. But in favoring retrenchment, in refusing to allow to these committees the clerks cut off by the minority report, we are not destroying the means of usefulness of these committees. I stand ready, and I believe the majority upon the floor of this House stand ready, to give any committee one clerk, two clerks, or a dozen clerks whenever the necessity for their employment is demonstrated. But until the time comes when that necessity is demonstrated, it is our duty, coming fresh from the hands of the people, who have pronounced in favor of economy, to economize, to be careful and watchful that the taxes wrung from the people by high tariffs upon everything that they eat, that they wear, and that they sleep upon shall be economically expended, and not expended in useless and unnecessary ways.

The facts that have been shown here in the minority report are not confuted, at least are not successfully confuted. Until they are it is more than a question of economy; it is a question of common honesty and principle which is involved, in saying whether or not you will put your hands in the pockets of the people and give to these committees ornamental clerks to do the work, not of the committees, but of the chairmen of these committees. I am opposed to allowing them the clerks.

Mr. RUSK. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in the assignment of clerks to these various committees, but I want to say that I am heartily in favor of the report of the majority of the Committee on Accounts. We have occasionally, in this Hall, had manifestations of the economical mania which are ludicrous, and the proposition here, in my opinion, is one of them. Instead of having too many clerks, I believe it to be the fact that we have not a sufficient number. Toward the close of every session of Congress the representatives of the people upon this floor are called upon to vote appropriations of public money to pay for private secretaries to the grave and reverend seniors at the other end of the Capitol, and after a feeble resistance we yield. And now the proposition is made that we shall deny to standing committees of this House the right to have the assistance of clerks. If these committees are useless, why have they not been abolished? That is the remedy. Do you keep them here only as places to which members may be assigned?

I agree with the statement of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RUSK], that if these committees perform the duties required of them by the rules of the House, there are no more important committees in this House. All of them were created, except two, as far back as 1816. Not only am I in favor of giving to every committee of this House the right to have the services of a clerk, but I want here to make the declaration also that I am in favor of giving to every member of this House the same privilege. [Applause.]

I have received within the last few days a notification from the Hon. Jere Rusk, of the Agricultural Department, that there are about nine mail bags full of seeds for my distribution. How are they to be sent to the people? Why have you appropriated money for their distribution when you refuse to make an appropriation for clerks for this purpose? You have expended millions of dollars in printing public documents for the information of the people, and yet refuse to make proper provision for their distribution by members of this House.

How are they to be distributed unless this Congress shall give to each member the right to have some clerical assistance for the performance of this work? I am not insisting that members should have clerks to attend to their private business and concerns, but I do maintain that clerical assistance is necessary to enable them to respond to the wishes of their constituents.

Mr. DICKERSON. How will clerks of committees aid in that?

Mr. WISE. I say I am in favor of clerks for every member.

Mr. DICKERSON. That is all right.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] thought it necessary to make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, the object of which was to allow to every member of this House the assistance of a clerk for the distribution of seeds and public documents to his constituents. I repeat what I have already said, that if the committees on expenditures in the various Departments give attention to the subjects of which they have jurisdiction, there are no more important committees in this House. It is no argument to say that because these committees in the past have not performed their duties that those which have been appointed by the present Speaker will not perform theirs.

Mr. Speaker, I shall give my hearty support to this resolution of the majority of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I feel myself compelled to differ from the gentleman who has just preceded me, and shall give a few of the reasons that lead me to this difference. The House has organized itself into committees. For what purpose? To expedite business. The committees are given clerks for what purpose? No man can tell us of a public reason that can be other than that the clerk is also given to expedite business. This is a Republic, supposedly founded upon equal rights, and that American who does not love fair play and even-handed justice is unworthy of the name. If, then, we find in the course of practical experience that committees are organized to whom no business ever goes, and by whom no business is ever done, then these committees are not entitled to a clerk; and if their chairman gets one, it is a species of favoritism that, in a certain sense, reflects upon every other member of this House who permits favoritism and will not stand up for equal justice for himself and for his own district.

It is no argument, to my mind, to say that because these are standing committees, and created for the purpose of carrying on the work of the House, that therefore we must also give to these "ornamental committees," as they are called, clerks, for there is a fundamental difference in the case of appointments and the action of the people of the country. That difference is this: That the committee we create simply exists through the will of the House, but the appointment of the Speaker gives the people nothing. We get no additional privileges of any kind, nor any perquisites, not even one more 2-cent postage stamp by it. The moment we establish a clerk on these committees, instead of doing what is public with it, as we all know, we put the appointment into the hands of the chairman, whose appointment is always ratified under the courtesy which exists in committee, and which, under the rule adopted the other day, has been put into the shape of a part of the standing rules; that is to say, that the chairman shall nominate the clerk, and that the committee shall ratify the nomination, which is the usual courtesy in committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have voted here to-day against granting any subsidies. This House, by a majority of 164 to some 90, said they were opposed to subsidies. I am opposed to giving $2,186 to the chairman of a committee who does not need it. I am for equal and even-handed justice. My duties here compel me to work at least twelve hours a day. Many and many a time I have worked until 1, 2, and 3 o'clock in the morning in this Capitol without leaving it, and I have never had a clerk or an opportunity of obtaining one.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what the limit was? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I have never had a clerk at the public expense; but whenever I wanted a stenographer or typewriter, I have employed one and paid for it out of my own pocket. And I believe that what I have suggested should be the rule of the House in every instance where there are no substantial duties to perform by the committee.

Now, sir, this does not contravene the general proposition you can very well see. These standing committees are created because the House is thus organized, and the duties are apportioned to all. If any investigations are to be made the committee is at hand to make that investigation, and if there are other duties for that committee to perform the committee is at hand to help to perform their duties; and there is not a man in this House who would not give to that committee a clerk or a stenographer, or both, if such were needed. The House would instantly vote for it. But to establish deliberately here, after the vote we have given to-day, a proposition that says because the House has created these standing committees, and after the attention of the House is called to the fact that the members of these committees perform no duties whatever, we shall give them each a clerk and maintain them at an expense of twenty-one hundred and odd dollars each, is giving a kind of subsidy.

I believe that the gentlemen who represent the minority report here state that $27,000 would be expended in this way, and we had just as well save that $27,000, and a great deal better, than to permit it to be squandered now in the way proposed. I voted with the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on the proposition against subsidies to-day, and I think this, sir, that we have here a small subsidy provided for; and for these reasons, and many others that I might suggest, I shall vote for the minority report.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, it was with great pleasure that I heard last fall that the Democratic candidate for governor in Massachusetts had been reëlected, that he had been reëlected on a reform of the tariff issue, and reëlected because the laborers and organized trades unions of that State recognized his ability and his devotion to the interests of the people.

One of the results of his reëlection is an investigation in Massachusetts of what is known as the "sweating system." Possibly there are gentlemen upon the floor of this House who do not understand the "sweating system;" but there is no tailor, no toiler, man or woman, employed in the clothing business, who does not understand it. It is the giving out of the making of cloaks, dresses, and all kinds of wearing apparel to a middleman, who distributes the work among the working men and women and compels them to furnish their own thread and buttons.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I protest against this House of Representatives acting as a middleman and upholding the sweating system here. [Cries of "Good!" "Good!" and applause.] You were sent here by the people to do their work. If you farm it out to your committees, for Heaven's sake don't ask those committees to find their own thread and buttons. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have learned from my experience in this House that at the beginning of each term of Congress there are certain men styled economists—whether real economists or not I can not say—who deliberately begin work by proposing that the members of the House tie their own hands and their own feet and then try to do business. [Laughter and applause.] But I notice that when it comes to voting appropriations for the legislators at the other end of the Capitol these gentlemen do not even wait to be told what is required. They put into the appropriation bills of this House, without waiting for a request from the Senate, appropriations for 142 clerks for 88 Senators. Yet these same gentlemen talk now about reducing the paltry number of 57 clerks allotted to the 334 members of this House! Is this economy, or is it hypocrisy? [Applause and laughter.]

Other Houses of Congress in years gone by have carried out this economical principle by repealing the franking privilege. What is the result? There is not a man in this House who does not pay out of his own pocket from 50 cents to $1.50 daily for postage. [Cries of "That's so!"] For whom? For his own business? No; but for the business of his constituents. [Cries of "That's so!" "That's right!" and applause.] And now, in addition to this, it is proposed to require your chairmen of committees to do all their own clerical work, to get their pens and their paper, and walk into the stationery room and have their mucilage bottles filled [laughter], to wait upon themselves, to frank their own documents, to pack their seeds, to write their letters and reports, to direct their own envelopes and pay their own postage, and, of course, to pay for their own shaving, which is not the rule at the other end of the Capitol. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, if there is a committee of this House that ought to have a clerk, provided the committee does its duty, it is the very one to which the gentleman from Kentucky referred, the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. [Laughter.] I tell the new members of the House that the longer they are here, the more speeches they hear and make in this Hall, the more thoroughly they will be convinced that if one clerk or two clerks or three clerks will serve to stir up the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics to do its duty, the more they will be convinced that the appropriation is an extremely good investment. [Laughter.] Their bodily and mental health will be conserved.

But, Mr. Speaker, the House itself holds the key to this situation. It creates these committees. If you have no work for them, abolish them; but as long as you do have the least work for them and as long as they do exist, do not compel them, in their Congressional sewing, to furnish their own thread and buttons. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I have always had a very high admiration for a gentleman who talks fairly on all occasions. If I understood the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] correctly, he is in favor of letting all these committees have clerks. He has given the country that much information; but the country ought also to be informed that the gentleman from New York himself is the chairman of the Committee on the Library, which has but three members. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And that committee has twenty-three monument bills already in its hands. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. I trust that it will not be long until it has twenty-four. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, I think that the minority report should be adopted. It has become a general expression, not only upon this floor but throughout the country, that there are quite a number of committees of this House that absolutely do nothing at all. Some of those committees have clerks, and in my judgment the committees themselves should be abolished as well as the clerks. If any one of the great Departments of this Government conducts its business in such a loose or incompetent way as that an investigation becomes necessary, I think the House ought to provide a committee to conduct that investigation, ought to give that committee such instructions and such aid and assistance as it can properly require to do its work; but if the House, by a system of rules or otherwise, creates a number of committees and puts them in the category of "investigating committees," simply for the purpose of giving to each a sinecure in the form of a clerk, that seems to me trifling with the advice which my friend from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN, has given us on so many occasions; and I will now conclude my remarks by submitting a point of order, namely, that this report proposing to give clerks to these committees is not within the language of his resolutions adopted this morning, nor within his very liberal construction of them.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to join in the discussion of policies involved in this proposition, but I deem it my duty to say a few words in correction of what is evidently a mistake on the part of the minority of this committee. They say that the Committee on the Militia made no report in the last Congress. Now, I had the honor of being chairman of that committee in the last Congress, and I hold in my hand a report of 26 pages which I made, under the direction of the committee, and submitted it to the House. I understand that that committee is one of those that are to be deprived of clerks.

Mr. DICKERSON. If the gentleman will permit me, our report does not say that committee made no report, it says that it made six.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The report says:

> The Committee on the Militia has made six reports in six years, at a cost of $5,400."

Then it says in parenthesis, "None in the Fifty-first Congress."

Mr. DICKERSON. That is the fact, as the record discloses.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The RECORD shows that that is the statement.

Mr. DICKERSON. The statement is that there was no report in that Congress, but that there have been in six years six reports.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But it states that there was no report in the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. DICKERSON. That is right. In the Fifty-first Congress there was no report made, but in six years there were six reports from that committee.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I hold in my hand one report made by that committee in the last Congress.

Mr. DICKERSON. Our statement is made on information furnished by the record-keeper of this House.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Well, there is some mistake about it, for I made this report from that committee in the last Congress; and I want to say further that it involved a great deal of labor; it involved repeated meetings of the committee. Allow me to add that if there is any one question which is now interesting the country it is that of the reorganization of the militia of the United States. Such a reorganization is demanded. There were many meetings of the committee in the last Congress; there were numerous interviews; the committee heard delegations from the different States. In my judgment it would be a great mistake to strip that committee of any of its equipments for doing thorough work. Nothing has been done with the militia laws of the country since the First Congress. There is needed thorough work on that subject. Having made this correction, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, what a comical old humbug the Democratic party is. [Laughter.] Well, it is laughable. Year after year, Congress after Congress, the same old song, the same old tune, on one string. [Laughter.] I stood here yesterday and looked at that remarkable spectacle presented on the other side of this Hall when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stood up, and while the brethren gathered around him administered to them in allopathic doses the medicine of "retrenchment and reform." There was something so familiar about the grouping that I tried to recall where it was that I had seen or heard or read of something of that kind before.

Finally it all came back to me; it was only history repeating itself; and this remarkable episode and spectacle was simply a reproduction of the prophesy of Dickens, and the picture of Cruikshank, when they depicted, the one in description, the other with his pencil, that famous scene where Mrs. Squeers gathered the boys around her at Dotheboys Hall and administered to them with a long spoon their doses of brimstone and treacle (retrenchment and reform) for the purpose of breaking down their appetites and saving provisions. [Great laughter.] I knew you would recognize the picture; and the only feeling of melancholy I have in connection with it is that Dickens died before seeing the realization of his dream.

Oh, yes; it was all according to programme, all familiar, even when our friend Mr. Pecksniff arose and, with taffy in one hand and amendment in the other, undertook to forward the great on-moving car of retrenchment and reform. And then our other old friend, the Rev. Mr. Chadband, of Kentucky, came in with "Bless you, my children," and pronounced the benediction. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Speaker, there was more of history and fun condensed in yesterday afternoon's proceedings than I have ever witnessed before in a week.

There was our volatile friend from Alabama, Gen. WHEELER, a gentleman who always leaps upon the back of the great questions of debate, to "ride the whirlwind and direct the storm," with an impetuosity which reminds one of the manner in which a representative of the Darwinian theory would ride upon the trick elephant in a circus. [Laughter.]

He started out, Mr. Speaker—I am always interested in what he says, and more interested in the way he says it—he started out yesterday morning to "hurl" something or other back "with scorn" [laughter]; but he omitted to sufficiently lubricate his "hurler," and in some way or other got into difficulty before he was through. [Laughter.] He opened out like a calliope on a Mississippi River steamboat, and he wound up like a sandpeep in the last stages of asthma. [Laughter.] He reminded me—for these events were full of suggestiveness to a quiet onlooker—he reminded me of one of those modern patent dolls of Edison's, with a phonograph inside. Those of you who have ever practiced with that instrument may remember that sometimes an imperfect cylinder is shoved into the machine, so that from the full diapason of a brass band you run down to a feeble squeak when the diaphragm needle gets out of the groove. [Laughter.]

From the way the gentleman started and the way he ended I was afraid something had broken inside of him. [Loud laughter.] The loftiness of his aerial flight and the suddenness of his descent reminded me of the excuse the Irishman made for being bow-legged, when he said he went up in a balloon once and walked back. [Laughter.]

Then there was our distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], a gentleman who is haunted all the time by the nightmare of apprehension that he is too good looking to be taken for a Democrat [laughter], and who therefore feels obliged to enter a protest on all possible occasions to keep up the assurance of his party orthodoxy. Why, he does look like a first-class, clean-cut, well-conditioned Republican citizen, proud of his country, its glorious achievements and possibilities; yet when he rises to speak in this House he undergoes a transformation beyond my power of description.

From the expression of countenance that he adopts on such occasions, and that pained tone, that exceedingly distressing sound that he attaches to his oratorical efforts, I can not help thinking that making a Democratic speech actually goes against his system. [Laughter.]

And behind all this, the stage manager, the gentleman from Indiana, undertaking to start the reform exhibition by protestations to the people in advance; trying the old game of throwing out a cloud of proclamations without regard to performances to follow them; proposing to deal with this great nation and its illimitable responsibilities and destinies as though it were a nickel-in-the-slot machine, and even then trying to beat the machine by dropping a bogus nickel in the slot. [Great laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat tired, after all my amusement, with this sort of performance presented in the House in the name of legislation. I have been watching with a great deal of care and curiosity, I have read with more attentiveness and regularity than is good for my mental health or my moral condition the record of the pretensions and the expressions of the leaders of the Democratic party extant to-day, and in the last six months I have found only one expression from a Democratic source that rises to the level of American patriotism, and that came from the lips of a woman, the estimable lady who is now presiding over the executive mansion in the State of New York.

Some of you may have read the account published in a leading Democratic journal of the experiences of the wife of one of our former associates here on her arrival at the executive mansion in Albany, an executive mansion provided by a "profligate legislature" to enable the governor of that State to live in what some of our friends who have spoken here to-day would designate as "ostentatious affluence." [Laughter.] I say that some of you may have read, as I did, in the columns of the New York World, an account of that lady's experience in undertaking to bring order out of the chaos that had resulted in that establishment after two successive periods of Democratic "retrenchment and reform." I will not detain the House by trying to recall the details of how that lady's tasteful sensibilities were shocked by finding a profusion of lemon-squeezers and a deficit of napkins, by finding cigar stumps in the sugar bowl and poker-chips in the State prayer book. [Laughter and applause.]

I say I will not detain the House by going into these particulars, but ask you to imagine the work of pulling down the lithographs of opera bouffe actresses and burlesque opera dancers, in order to redisclose the historic features of DeWitt Clinton, Samuel J. Tilden, and the other sages and statesmen of the Empire State. [Laughter.] But I want to read you from that Democratic authority the one patriotic sentence, the one creditable expression that I have heard from any Democratic quarter for six months past, and, as I say, that fell from the lips of a woman.

Before repeating it, Mr. Speaker, I may say that, as "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings" we may find wisdom, this good lady was under no bonds to anybody to speak anything but the truth or utter anything but common sense, and standing as she did in this arena where two Democratic bachelor governors had been illustrating all the peculiar virtues of Democracy [laughter] for an extended period of years, looking over the devastation that had been wrought with an eye to repairing the damages and restoring the executive mansion to a respectable basis of habitation for the public service, in reply to a question as to whether retrenchment and reform had left this splendid establishment in such shape that the new governor could give a dinner to his friends, she answered in the negative by saying:

Oh, no; I have not begun to think about a state dinner. With the present condition of things I should not be able to serve a breakfast of sixteen covers properly.

[Laughter.]

How that must delight my distinguished and honorable friend from Indiana. [Laughter.] If she had only said they did not have enough coal left for the kitchen range to warm over a cold mess of potatoes I think my friend from Indiana would want to move to New York without delay. [Laughter.]

Then, too, the butler's pantry is in such bad shape that it will have to be completly overhauled. Why, a New York butler would feel insulted if asked to use it, even temporarily.

I presume that Governor Cleveland and Governor Hill had been employing a butler from Indiana. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But what I want to call the attention of the House to is contained in the following paragraph. Governor Flower and his wife evidently do not think it is necessary even for a Democratic governor of the State of New York to go about with his elbows out of his coat for the purpose of flaunting the flag of truce toward the Democratic House now in session. [Renewed laughter on the Republican side.] They propose to live in a respectable, decorous, civilized, refined, and proper manner. And, Democrat as he is, I hope to pay my respects to Governor Flower in that same executive mansion after they have had it repaired and renovated.

But in making the necessary purchases for placing that edifice in a condition befitting the official residence of the chief magistrate of the grandest of the American States it ought to please every American citizen, as it pleases me, that the wife of the governor of New York is willing to say, and does say without hesitation, that in order to put that establishment in the highest state of efficiency she is not obliged to go beyond the confines of the American Republic to find every article that may be needed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Not at this time. The article from which I quote says:

Mrs. Flower said she would have to buy in New York further supplies absolutely essential before any entertaining can be done by the family.

I will premise what follows simply by saying that those supplies embrace every article within household use, including the much-debated schedule of the productions of tinware.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Maine allow me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not.

Mr. ENLOE. Then I make the point of order——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. ENLOE. I make a point of order—— [Cries of "Oh, no; let him go on!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the discourtesy is to the lady and not to myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. I know it is. It is a discourtesy to her to read that matter here.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mrs. Flower further said:

I do not belong to the society of shoppers who think that the foreign trademark is the only stamp of excellence an article can possess. I am an American through and through.

[Applause.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. All good Democrats are.

Mr. BOUTELLE (continuing to read):

I have been in a number of trade marts in Europe and Southern Asia, and I have yet to find a better, cheaper place to shop than a first-class American store. There is nothing I want that I can't buy in Broadway. Last year we prepared our daughter's trousseau, gave her just what she wanted, and bought everything in Watertown. If the firm did not have the particular article called for they wired the manufacturer or importer for samples.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

And through that courtesy we not only save time, but money as well. No. American goods are good enough for one American family. The mansion needs replenishing. It is an American institution, and for the coming three years it will be run on the American plan.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CARUTH. That is, on Democratic principles.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish merely to cite one more Democratic authority, and that is in answer to these wailings of agony in regard to our impoverished and impecunious condition as a country, all of course brought about by the "billion-dollar Congress" and the "McKinley bill."

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The New York Times ought to be accepted as tolerable Democratic authority. [Laughter.] It has gone deeper and stayed out of sight longer in Democratic mud than any other newspaper in this country, and you gentlemen ought not to go back on it; but it had a lucid interval the other day, on the 7th day of January, 1892, when it said in a leading editorial:

The returns from the Bureau of Statistics of exports of merchandise continue to be of a character simply extraordinary. In the month of November,

1891, these exceed $110,000,000, yielding a net balance as against exports in favor of this country for that month alone of over $45,000,000 and bringing a net balance for three months previous to December 1 to nearly $103,000,000. It is impossible that such sound facts as these shall not tell with great effect upon the general prosperity of the country. They involve directly a degree of profit to the agricultural class that has not been known in recent years, and indirectly to the transportation and manufacturing interests. Meanwhile money continues entirely easy and obtainable by all who have a legitimate use for it, and so far as money-making goes there is no visible reason why the United States should not have a "Happy New Year."

And, Mr. Speaker, the only people in the United States to-day who fail to unite in that aspiration are those who claim to be the leaders of the Democratic party; and I will say to them in closing that the people of this great country are going to have a happy and a prosperous new year in spite of the Democratic party, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and his nickel-slot machine. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend from Maine will be allowed unanimous consent to withdraw from his speech so much as concerns what Mrs. Flower said in regard to imported samples. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Maine will mark in the RECORD to-morrow that part of his speech with reference to Mrs. Flower and send it to his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, so that they can see how a good Democrat did when they proposed to make another purchase of china. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add, as a moral to the speech of the gentleman from Maine, that under the two Democratic administrations of the State of New York to which he referred the State debt was reduced $7,000,000. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Three millions of dollars were left in the treasury when Governor Hill retired from office [renewed applause on the Democratic side], that treasury being empty when Grover Cleveland entered upon office. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to take any part in this discussion, and I refrained from taking any part in the debate on the resolution yesterday, but the remarks of the gentleman from Maine were of such a character that I feel inclined to add an observation or two in regard to the impression which was made upon my mind by the debate on the harmless resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] yesterday in comparison with the scenes which we witnessed here two years ago. I have no doubt but that the martial spirit of the gentleman from Maine chafes exceedingly under a tame performance like this, and that he would infinitely prefer to be booted and spurred, riding over a helpless minority and turning them out of their seats under general parliamentary law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was the performance of two years ago, but a change has come over the spirit of our dreams since that time; and I may say that the scenes of yesterday and this harmless debate to-day were much healthier for the country than the spectacle of a gentleman from Maine driving the Representatives of the people from this Hall under general parliamentary law. Another thing, Mr. Speaker. I think those resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana might be fitly characterized as an outburst of the public conscience. [Laughter.] They did not signify a great deal that is practical, and the explanation which he offered this morning shows that they are broad enough and comprehensive enough to allow appropriations that come under the heads legislative, executive, judicial, or other legitimate appropriations; and after all the debate we have had we have reached the conclusion that this House will still be the judge of its own appropriations. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] used an illustration which struck me with some force at the time. He quoted from Charles Dickens, and spoke of the character of Mrs. Squeers, and of the fact that she administered brimstone and treacle to the students with a spoon; but do you not know that if he had read the story a little further he would have learned that after awhile the students of that school overturned the administration and turned around and took the spoon and compelled her to take brimstone and treacle [great laughter]; and that is exactly what the American people have done to the gentlemen who occupy the quarter section on my right.

We came here two years ago, and our Republican friends compelled the Democratic party to take brimstone and treacle; but now the people have turned upon you, and we on this side of this side aisle are now administering it to you out of the same spoon. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE endeavored to interrupt Mr. ENLOE.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman who would not allow me to interrupt him, and I do not want him to interject any views he may have into my remarks.

I probably ought to do as he should have done, say something about this resolution, but the debate has taken a wide range, and general parliamentary law has not got a hatchet in its hand like it had last Congress, to chop gentlemen off, for I remember that I used to have my wings clipped when I wanted to take a little flight away from the question under consideration. I believe I will trust the present administrator of general parliamentary law and proceed a little further on the line of the gentleman's argument.

I will say, however, before doing so, that so far as these committees are concerned, the purpose of the minority report being to deprive them of clerks, that if there ever was a time when these committees were needed, now is the time. That they are needed, not for the purpose of preventing raids upon the Treasury, but to put the House on the track of those gentlemen who did raid it in the "billion-dollar Congress" and show where the Treasury surplus has gone. It is charged that in some of the Departments of the Government——

Mr. FUNSTON. Why do not you take up the case of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Fiftieth Congress, and find him.

Mr. ENLOE. Oh, the gentleman does not represent the farmers, and he can sit still. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will call the gentleman's attention to what I consider execrable taste in his allusions to the gentleman from Alabama [Gen. WHEELER], whose physical infirmities interfered with his speech here yesterday. It is only a matter of taste to indulge in personal ridicule, and is hardly up to the dignity to which the gentleman aspires.

This debate illustrates another point, and that is the difference in presiding officers. While in the last Congress we were frequently denied the privilege of discussing matters foreign to the subject under debate, the gentleman's speech has taken the widest range without touching the question before the House. That is an example of the freedom of debate. I will also say to the gentleman that I think he was guilty of great discourtesy to the wife of the governor of New York, whose friendship he claims, to read before this House in a political debate, and for a political purpose, some expression of hers that was perhaps spoken, if spoken at all, as we often speak here, in the presence of some reporter, who was not known to be a reporter, who went off and reported it and put it in the newspapers. [Laughter.] It is the way we frequently get into print. [Laughter.]

I do not think it was courteous to her to read that matter here, but if the gentleman proposes to make an argument upon it, I am for the "American" idea, and I wish he had gone a little further and told this House where the last set of china ordered for the White House came from, and whether it was not bought in a foreign market. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I would like to ask him also, if he is on sufficiently intimate terms with the President of the United States to put his feet under the mahogany in the White House, to describe for us the "monogram" or "crest" of the Harrisons that is burnt into the bottom of that set of china which was imported from a foreign country. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. How about the Scotch whisky?

Mr. ENLOE. Somebody wants to know, "What about the Scotch whisky?" I think it is one of the gentlemen from Maine. Why, sir, a man from the State of Maine would not know Scotch whisky if he met it on the road, but I have no doubt he is perfectly familiar with "wild-cat." [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I will give you my opinion of this ludicrous performance which has excited the gentleman's [Mr. BOUTELLE'S] risibilities to such a degree and produced this remarkable outburst of humor, sarcasm, and drivel. I wish to say to him that the resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] are explicit enough for one thing. I do not believe that under them we are going to follow in this House the leadership of that distinguished farmer from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON], who headed the Committee on Agriculture in the last Congress, and appropriate any more money to take away from Divine Providence the privilege of distributing the rain over this country. [Laughter.]

I think there can be no doubt that the resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana will cover a case of that kind. On the other hand, we are not going to cut off anybody's private pension bills by citing those resolutions against them. We are not going, either, to cut off the World's Columbian Exposition, unless we do it by a vote, because if we had been going to do that there would not have been harmony in the camp to-day. [Laughter.] So, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is not only harmless but a good thing to have freedom of debate. Why, when I got away from the Fifty-first Congress and got out in the country where I could say what I pleased I felt like a free American citizen. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You no doubt felt better?

Mr. ENLOE. There is no doubt, sir, that I shall get along better, and that every free American citizen will get along better when he can express his honest opinion anywhere and not have it chopped off by the dull hatchet of a dull czar. [Laughter.] Now,

Mr. Speaker, I believe I am in favor of the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana as adopted this morning with the modifications which he made in explaining it. I believe I am in favor, also, of allowing these committees to have their clerks, in order that they may go on with the very important investigations which ought to be made by this House. I will say, furthermore, by way of illustrating human nature, that if I had been on the successful side in the fight for the Speakership and had been fortunate enough to have been made chairman of even the least of these committees I would have been found here voting to keep my clerk, and I do not believe there is a member here who would not take the same attitude under the same circumstances. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, believing that the House is ready to vote upon this question, I now demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. Is this debate going to be "chopped off" in this way? [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. Will not ordering the previous question have the effect to "chop off" debate? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Maine, that it will have that effect.

Mr. REED. So that we shall have to go to our own States in order to enjoy that freedom of expression which belongs to "every free American citizen!" [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the substitute reported by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON].

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 164, not voting 82; as follows:

So the resolution reported by the minority of the committee was not adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have refrained from voting because I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE]. If he were present he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the resolutions reported by the Committee on Accounts.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. RUSK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to announce at this time the appointment of several Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, and in this connection will state that vacancies in these positions have existed for some time, and this action is taken in accordance with the desire of the Speaker. The Clerk will read the names of the appointees.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOSEPH WHEELER, of Alabama.
W. C. P. BRECKENRIDGE, of Kentucky.
HENRY CABOT LODGE, of Massachusetts.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By unanimous consent, the following bills were introduced, read a first and second time, and respectively referred as stated:

PRESIDENTIAL VACANCIES.

By Mr. HATCH: A bill (H. R. 3927) to amend "An act to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President," approved January 19, 1886—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ST. ANDREWS BAY, FLORIDA.

By Mr. MALLORY: A bill (H. R. 3928) to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to St. Andrews Bay, in the county of Washington, in the State of Florida—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

NAVAL PURCHASE.

By Mr. O'FERRALL (for Mr. LAWSON): A bill (H. R. 3929) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the purchase of a lot of land opposite to the Gosport navy-yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FREE COTTON-BAGGING.

By Mr. KYLE: A bill (H. R. 3930) to place bagging for covering cotton upon the free list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WILLCOX. I desire to ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, who is detained at home by reason of a death in his family.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 3513) providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of documents has been fixed as a special order for to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal, and has been made a continuing order from day to day until disposed of. Inasmuch as the motion just adopted will prevent a meeting of the House to-morrow, I give notice that on Monday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall ask the House, in accordance with its previous order, to take up that bill.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If there be no further business before the House, I move that we adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to the resolution of the 12th instant, a copy of the proceedings of the extra session of the Board of Supervisors and Inspectors of Steam Vessels held in Washington, September 28 to October 8, inclusive, 1891, containing certain information relative to the use of projectiles and other life-saving appliances before that Board; which, on motion of Mr. HOAR, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Customs relative to the salary of the surveyor of customs at Sioux City, Iowa; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommending that the agreements with the upper and middle bands of Spokane Indians and certain other bands of Indians be ratified; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting findings filed by that court in the case of the New York Indians vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company for the year ending December 31, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SANITARY CONDITION OF CAPITOL BUILDING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1892.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution passed the Senate on the 12th instant, relating to the ventilating and plumbing of the Senate wing of the Capitol, I have the honor to report as follows:

I consider the Senate Chamber and corridors well ventilated; also, all of the committee rooms originally constructed for that purpose. There are some apartments, formerly used as storerooms, that are now used for business purposes. These are ventilated only by the air being forced in by the fan, to find its way out by means of the openings into the corridors through doors, which are always open when the rooms are occupied.

The plumbing, in my judgment, is in good condition, except in the case of that to one washstand, which is now being put in order. It is true that much of the plumbing fixtures are not of the latest patterns. These might with advantage be changed for those of the most recent and approved styles.

I am not aware of any defect in the plumbing or sewerage existing within the Capitol which can unfavorably affect the sanitary condition of the building. A sanitary engineer of high reputation and experience has been called to make a careful examination of the plumbing and sewerage and report upon the same.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect United States Capitol.

To the VICE-PRESIDENT.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of residents of Medina, N. Y., praying for the ratification of the Brussels treaty for the suppression of the African slave trade, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, praying Congress to assist in representing the general interests of the country by extending such financial aid as may insure to the World's Fair at Chicago a success that will be creditable to the nation; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of citizens of Hamilton and Boone Counties, Iowa, praying for the passage of the antioption bill introduced by Mr. Butterworth in the last Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of many citizens of Boyd County, Nebr., praying for the passage of the bill defining options and futures and imposing special taxes on dealers therein, known in the last Congress as the Butterworth option bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Boyd County, Nebr., praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition in the form of a series of resolutions passed by the Association of Congregational Churches of Nebraska, praying for the passage of a bill to increase the number of chaplains in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition signed by a number of governors of States, by ex-President Hayes, and by many other distinguished citizens, praying for the early passage of the bill placing Bvt. Lieut. Col. J. Madison Cutts on the retired list of the Army with the rank of captain. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Champaign County Farmers' Institute Association, of Ohio, remonstrating against appropriations for national irrigation reservoirs; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by vessel owners and persons interested in shipping on the Great Lakes, praying for the transfer of the Revenue Marine Service to the naval establishment; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Elm Tree Farmers' Alliance, of Beuna Vista, Ohio, praying for the extension of the free delivery and collection of mail matter to every post-office in the thickly settled portions of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the United Presbyterian Congregation of Knoxville, Ohio, praying for action by Congress looking to the closing of the World's Columbian Fair on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition numerously signed by the tobacco manufacturers of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the enactment of an amendment to the tariff law in regard to the internal-revenue tax on tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the First United Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the World's Columbian Fair being open on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Ministerial Union of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for Government aid for the Columbian Exposition on condition that the Exposition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of certain letter-carriers of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the passage of legislation providing an increase of salary for letter-carriers in the fourth year of their service; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the forfeiture to the United States of certain lands included within the grant made to the Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN. I present a memorial of the Port Townsend (Wash.) Chamber of Commerce on the subject of coast defenses. The memorial sets forth the vital necessity of protection to life and property on Puget Sound in the event of foreign war. It clearly sets forth the unprotected condition of Puget Sound both from a military and naval standpoint. It also calls attention to the recommendation of military and naval authorities upon the subject. It draws the attention of the Senate to the great amount of property and the important commercial interests that are placed at absolute hazard in the event of war. It calls attention to the growth of commerce on the Sound, and to the very significant fact that Puget Sound is the great coal depot, the supply place of the Pacific Slope, and other matters of a nature so important that I ask that the memorial be printed as a document. It closes with the following request:

In view of the facts set forth herein, your memorialists, on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of Port Townsend and on behalf of the people and interests of the Pacific coast, do earnestly and most respectfully urge upon Congress the existing necessities of the situation, and petition that an appropriation sufficient to allow the construction of fortifications on at least one of the sites named herein and favored by the War Department, be made at the present session.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK. I beg leave to present an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 427) to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices in towns and cities where the post-office receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000 annually. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table. The bill to which it relates is on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

ESTATE OF OLYMPUS YOUNG.

Mr. GIBSON of Maryland submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the claim of Abraham E. Eves, executor of the estate of Olympus Young, deceased, now of the county of Somerset, State of Maryland, and late of the State of Louisiana, for quartermaster and commissary stores and supplies and other property alleged to have been taken and used by the United States Army during the late war from the plantation of the said Olympus Young, deceased, near Brashear City, now Morgan City, in the parish of St. Marys, State of Louisiana, be referred to the Secretary of War, who shall investigate the justice and equity of said claim and the loyalty of the said deceased, and report the amount and value of said property taken and used by the said Army, and also what amount, if any, has been paid on the same; and that he report all the facts and evidence in the case for the further consideration of the Senate.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, directed to send to the Senate, as early as is practicable, copies of all agreements made with other countries relating to an interchange of trade and commerce under the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890; and also to furnish the Senate with all information received as to the practical effect of such agreements.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the resolution lie upon the table. I shall call it up shortly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie upon the table and be printed.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to report to the Senate of the United States, first, whether the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia completed its railway from Boundary street to the boundary line of the District of Columbia within the time specified in section 8 of its charter for the completion of the same; secondly, whether "cars of the best construction" are now used on said road, and are run "as often as the public convenience may require, in accordance with a table or schedule fixed by the company, a copy of which shall be filed with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and approved by them," as provided in section 10 of the act of incorporation.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

Mr. DOLPH. If the morning business is concluded, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, which is Senate bill 539.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 539) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not see the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] present. I have been appealed to by him to permit this bill to go over until his colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] can reach Washington. I understand that the senior Senator from Indiana will be here to-morrow, and I have been informed by the junior Senator that he would have no objection to my presenting the bill to the Senate to-day, giving his colleague an opportunity to speak upon it to-morrow. I understand, also, that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] desires to speak upon the bill and is ready to do so. I do not suppose that the senior Senator from Indiana would particularly desire to be present at its consideration to-day.

But I am more embarrassed in regard to this measure by a communication which I received from the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] late this morning, leaving me no time to communicate with him, in which he says:

> The La Abra bill is on the Calendar, and possibly you have given notice to call it up on Monday or some day this week. I am one of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance to investigate the operations of the tariff laws, prices, etc., and it has been arranged that we meet in New York to-morrow—

This letter was dated on the 17th of January—

> for a final meeting there, and it seems to be necessary that I should attend. We will doubtless remain there the most of the week. I ascertained that New York people mainly are interested in the bill. Some of them I know, and they are very decent folks, and it would be necessary for me to carefully study the merits of the measure," etc.

Then he appeals to me to permit the measure to go over until he returns. He also says:

> I understand there are two measures; I am not sure that both have been reported. I should like this courtesy in respect to both.

That is, the Weil claim and the La Abra claim. I regret exceedingly that this appeal has been made to me. I do not like to appear to be lacking in senatorial courtesy, but my friend from New York certainly did not understand the position in which this measure stands at the present time. He supposes that simply a notice had been given to call it up to-day, but on the contrary the bill was called up and read at length, and the report of the committee printed in connection with it, on the 7th day of January, and an order was made that after the conclusion of the morning business to-day the bill should take precedence of any other special order or unfinished business. The postponement was made to accommodate the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. The people of New York are not the only people who are interested in the bill. There have been various assignments and divisions of the award made until there are people in several States of the Union interested, and there are several Senators who desire to be present when the bill is considered.

The danger that I should incur if I were to grant the request of the Senator from New York and submit to another postponement of the bill for a week would be that, at the end of the week, the senior Senator from Indiana might be absent and could not conveniently be present to present his views upon the measure, or the Senator from Missouri would not be accommodated by the change, and in the end the postponement of the bill from day to day would result, at the present session, precisely as it resulted in the last session of Congress—the bill would be postponed until there were so many measures upon the Calendar of public interest and private interest that it would be impossible to get it up for consideration.

This measure has been before Congress, in some shape, since 1877, when the Secretary of State appealed to Congress to pass some law providing for the distribution of the awards, or of the payments upon the awards as they were made annually by the Mexican Government. There have been various propositions before Congress for the action of Congress and of the Government in regard to this award. This bill was reported favorably in the Forty-ninth Congress by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. This matter was examined by the Committee on Foreign Relations, or a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Fiftieth Congress, and a large amount of testimony taken and an exhaustive report submitted in favor of the passage of the bill; but it was so late in the session that it was impossible to procure consideration for it at that time. At the last Congress we encountered the same difficulty in pressing and endeavoring to get the bill up for consideration before the Senate that we encounter now. There were so many people interested in it, so many Senators desired to have it postponed from time to time, that it was postponed until so late a day in the session that it was impossible to get it up for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. President, what is the condition of the matter now? It was the fourth bill on the Calendar reported to the Senate. It was ordered reported at the first meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is the second bill now on the Calendar. As I said, it was called up on the 7th of January and was made the special order for to-day, to take precedence of all other business. Apparently, now, the friends of the measure have an opportunity to secure its consideration and action upon it by the Senate in order that it may be sent to the other House and may be in a situation to receive early consideration there. It has been once postponed for the accommodation of an absent Senator. Another request is now made. I have no means of information as to whether at the expiration of another week, the time fixed, would be any more satisfactory to Senators and accommodate a larger number of Senators than the time which has already been fixed by the Senate for the consideration of the bill.

I also learned this morning that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] had received a communication from parties in New York in regard to this bill, and will, undoubtedly, give it attention and be prepared to represent their interests to the Senate. Under the circumstances—and I take this public method of stating the facts in regard to the case in order that the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will not feel aggrieved by my action—I regret that I do not feel at liberty to consent to the postponement of the measure.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned I am as ready to say what I desire to say on this subject now as at any other time. I have no request to prefer in regard to it.

The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] telegraphed this morning from Altoona that he is on his way and will be here this afternoon, but at so late an hour in the afternoon that it will not be possible for him to attend the session of the Senate to-day. He is anxious to be here when the cases are taken up. I say "the cases," because the same legal question arises in one case as in the other, although the facts of the two cases are different. That is all I desire to say in regard to it. I am perfectly willing to take the bill up now or take it up to-morrow morning.

I rose principally to move that the minority report in the La Abra case, which was submitted at a previous Congress by the then Senator from Georgia, Mr. Brown, not now a member of this body, be printed in the RECORD, as was the majority report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be done in the absence of objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is that?

Mr. VEST. I ask that the minority report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I think that minority report has been heretofore printed in the RECORD. At all events, I know it was printed as a document at the last session of Congress.

Mr. DOLPH. In the Fiftieth Congress. We did not reprint the report in the last Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no minority report at this session of Congress at all. No one has made a minority report. The committee is differently constituted from what it was then. Mr. Brown is not a member of the Senate, and to bring his report forward and print it in the RECORD is merely to put in an argument which has been made heretofore and which already is in the possession of the Senate as a document. It is a very extensive argument prepared by counsel. I hardly think that the RECORD ought to be encumbered with it. Senators can have access to it. There are plenty of copies of it here. The country feels no interest in it except upon the question of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. MORGAN. That minority report is very extensive, and it would take up a whole RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senate will not set an example of this kind, because it will encumber the RECORD unnecessarily. The report is much more convenient in the form of a pamphlet, as it is now upon our tables, than it would be if put in the RECORD. In the RECORD it would be in inferior type; it would not be readily accessible, nor could it be used on the floor of the Senate. The cost of printing a document of that kind in the RECORD, where it has to be repeated ever so many thousand times, would amount to a large sum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are 75 pages in the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Seventy-five pages. I hope the Senate will consider the question of sufficient importance to take a vote upon it. I desire to vote in the negative upon any proposition to print reports of committees of an unusual size in the RECORD. They are all put in volumes so that they can be accessible in the future, and are more convenient in that form than they are in the RECORD. The reports of committees of both Houses of Congress are printed in books, which are furnished to us in sufficient numbers for all practical purposes, and the idea of duplicating a publication of that kind in the RECORD is not only an unnecessary cost, but it is altogether useless and a waste of the public money, in my judgment. I shall therefore vote "no" on the proposition.

Mr. VEST. The objections made by the Senator from Ohio ought to have been made when the majority report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I had been here I certainly should have objected. When was that printed?

Mr. VEST. It was printed at this session, some three or four days ago perhaps.

Mr. DOLPH. It was printed on the 7th of January.

Mr. VEST. It was printed on the 7th day of January. I do not suppose that is of the essence of the matter at all. It was done at this session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not here at the time.

Mr. VEST. As to the minority report being printed, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in a separate document, a miscellaneous document, the same holds true in regard to the majority report. There it is as a miscellaneous document of the Senate, printed and reprinted.

I did not see the other day any necessity for printing the majority report of the committee in the RECORD, but it was done, and as a matter of fairness the two sides of the question ought to be presented. It is very true that the report of the then Senator from Georgia was not made at this session and that he has ceased to be a member of the Senate; but the issues are identical. He was a member of the subcommittee of which the Senator from Alabama was chairman, from a majority of which, composed of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Oregon, came this report, based on the report made by them to the full Committee on Foreign Relations. This minority report comes from the third member of that subcommittee. In justice to him, after putting the majority report in the RECORD, the minority report ought also to be put there.

I will say in addition that whatever the action of the Senate may be it will not keep this report out of the RECORD if I or any other member choose that it shall go in, because I can make it a part of my argument, or any other Senator can do the same, and it will be reported in his speech, and would be simply a question of the physical endurance of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the minority report, to which he has referred, be printed in the RECORD.

The question being put; a division was called for, and the ayes were 5 and the noes 11.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that there is no quorum, and I think, therefore, the motion should be withdrawn.

Mr. VEST. No quorum has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum voting, the roll will be called.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his motion.

Mr. VEST. I do not intend to be captious about this matter. As my colleagues here know, I generally defer to the will of the majority; but this report will go into the RECORD if I have to stand here and read it in my speech, and I think I shall hardly be denied the privilege of the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. VEST. I did not call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No; but does the Senator withdraw his motion? If not, the roll will be called.

Mr. VEST. I do not care about it, Mr. President, and I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to print is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask leave to have the amendment which I hold in my hand, being an amendment offered to the bankruptcy bill by me several years ago, reprinted, as it is out of print.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed, subject to the rule.

Mr. VEST. What is that, Mr. President? If it is anything about reprinting, after what has just occurred, I wish to know it.

Mr. GEORGE. It is an amendment which I offered to the bankruptcy bill two or three years ago.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is impossible for us to hear what is said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GEORGE. What disposition was made of my request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to print has been made, subject to the rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. We could not hear the request made by the Senator nor the reply of the Chair. I should like to know what the pending matter is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment to be proposed to the bankruptcy bill, which the Senator from Mississippi desires to have reprinted.

Mr. SHERMAN. In bill form?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order will be made, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 539) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico," concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, referring again to the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], if there were any way of ascertaining that the time fixed when the Senator could return and be present in the Senate would be satisfactory to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and to the other Senators who desire to be present when this bill is considered, I should feel inclined to favorably consider the proposition; but it will be seen at once that I am in the awkward predicament of taking the chances of postponing the consideration of this bill from a time fixed by the unanimous consent of the Senate to accommodate an absent member of the Senate, with no certainty that I do not discommode more than one Senator by fixing a time in the future. As I have said I have been greatly embarrassed by it, and I do not see how I can take a different course in justice to the public interest than I propose to take in the matter.

When I called up this bill on the 7th of January and had the report of the committee printed, I asked to have it read to the Senate, because the report which was prepared by me fully covers every question I think that can properly arise in the consideration of this bill.

I did not intend to occupy the time of the Senate, nor do I now, with any extended remarks in presenting this measure in the first instance. It is a measure which should pass the Senate, without a dissenting vote, upon its own merits. I propose at this time to make a brief statement in regard to the facts and the law of the case, and if the report of the committee or the statement which I now make shall be assailed by any opponent of the bill, I shall take great pleasure, as I have the notes already prepared for that purpose, in citing the documents and the oral testimony to show that the report is correct in every particular. But I will not take up the time of the Senate in submitting the bill in the first instance, by referring to the documents, by reading from them, or by quoting from the testimony.

The object of this bill is, in brief, to direct a suit or suits to be brought by the Attorney-General of the United States in the name of the United States in the Court of Claims, jurisdiction being conferred by the provisions of the bill upon that court, against the La Abra Mining Silver Company and its assigns of any portion of the award made by the United States and the Mexican Mixed Commission, under the convention between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, in respect of the claim of the said La Abra Company to determine whether the award was obtained by fraud or false swearing or other false or fraudulent practices on the part of the La Abra Company, its agents, attorneys, or assigns, with the right of either party to appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, and providing that even the false and fraudulent testimony which was taken before the Mixed Commission shall be received by the court and considered for what it may be worth.

The bill provides that if the Court of Claims shall find and adjudge that the award in favor of the La Abra Company was obtained by fraud and by false swearing, and was an imposition upon the Government of the United States, the United States shall release the Government of Mexico from the payment of any further installment upon the award.

I will say, in passing, that since the report was made—the bill was first presented in the Forty-ninth Congress—the Mexican Government has paid into the Treasury of the United States the entire award.

The bill provides for the return to the Government of Mexico of all that portion of the La Abra award which has not been distributed to the company and to its assigns, if it is found that the award was procured by fraud, but if the court shall find that this award was not secured by fraud and imposition and false swearing, the bill provides that the award shall be distributed among the parties entitled to it.

The questions now for consideration by the Senate are stated in the report as briefly, I think, as they can be well made, and I will read them.

First. Whether the evidence presented by the Mexican Government to show that the award made by said Mixed Commission in respect of the claim of La Abra Company was procured by fraud, and the testimony taken by the committee, under the authority of resolutions of the Senate herein referred to, is of such a character as to require investigation by a competent tribunal to determine whether the United States in presenting the claim of La Abra Company to the Mixed Commission was not made the victim of fraudulent imposition.

That is a question of fact:

Second. Whether Congress has the constitutional power to open the award and direct a suit to be brought to judicially determine, according to the principles of equity, whether the award, in whole or in part, was procured by fraud, in order that what the honor of the United States requires should be done in the premises may be done.

First, the question as to whether this award was procured by false and fraudulent testimony and the United States was imposed upon; and, second, as to the power and right of the Government of the United States to make this inquiry and determine for itself, Mexico not being a party to the suit, whether this award was procured by imposition, and to do what the honor of the United States requires should be done in the matter.

The La Abra Company was incorporated and organized under the laws of the State of New York in 1865, with its principal office in the city of New York, for the purpose of purchasing and working silver mines in Mexico. The parties who organized the company, according to the testimony, were evidently greatly imposed upon by persons who had silver mines in Mexico for sale.

Certain members interested in the company were sent out to examine the mines and with authority to make a purchase. They found a large display of silver already reduced, and were furnished with some rich specimens of ore, which assayed a very large amount of silver to the ton. They came back, organized a company, and sent their agents down into the Mexican country to take possession of the mines and to put up improved American machinery to work them. While they were putting up their mills and getting their machinery in order they caused, at a large expense, a considerable amount of ore to be got out and brought to the mill ready to be worked. When the mill was up and they began to reduce the ore, they found it was very low-grade ore and would not pay for the working.

In the mean time the company had been assessed for the full amount of its stock to meet the requirements of the agents of the company in Mexico. Members of the company had loaned large sums to the company, but at last their money was gone, their credit was gone, and the demands kept coming for money from their agents in Mexico. The agents were told that they must depend upon the proceeds of the mine to carry on the work, but as the ores would not pay for reduction, with their machinery, they found it necessary to discharge their workmen and to close down the mills after being repeatedly told by the president and officers of the company in New York that no further funds could be furnished. They abandoned the mine and left it in charge of a single agent appointed by the last superintendent of the company.

After this Mixed Commission was provided for certain parties connected with this company conceived the idea of making a large claim against the Mexican Government, claiming that they had been dispossessed of their mine, that their property had been destroyed, that they had been so treated in Mexico by the Mexican Government that they had lost their mine, their ore had been stolen, their mules had been stolen, and their operatives killed. The whole thing was manufactured from beginning to end. A claim was presented to the Mixed Commission, and on false testimony, on manufactured testimony, as it appears, because there is a statement from a witness who appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations, whose testimony was taken ostensibly before an American consul, that when they came to read it over it was found that it had not been taken as given by him, and he finally left his signature to a blank sheet of paper with the understanding that after the testimony had been corrected the consul should have it sent off as it had been corrected, and the witness afterwards comes upon the stand and says he never gave such testimony as appears in the depositions read before the Commission; and the other testimony in the case is false and fraudulent from beginning to end.

This company appeared, as I say, before the Mixed Commission and an award in favor of the La Abra silver mining claim was made for $683,041.30, or, in American gold, in which coinage the payments were made, $672,070.99. The amount heretofore paid, that is to the date of the report, by Mexico on account of the La Abra award, is $631,553.22.

Out of the first five installments paid by Mexico there was distributed to the claimants of La Abra award the sum of $240,683.06. The Secretary of State then, under an Executive order, suspended further payments, and there are now retained by the State Department, on account of said award, eight installments, amounting to $390,870.16. The award was rendered by the umpire December 27, 1875, and a motion on behalf of the Mexican Government for a rehearing was overruled by him October 20, 1876.

By the provisions of said convention the payment of the total sum of the awards due from Mexico was to be made in annual installments, and, following the usual precedents in such cases, Mr. Fish, then Secretary of State, in 1877 asked Congress for the necessary legislation to enable him to adjust the awards with Mexico, and to make distribution to the respective claimants. The convention provided no method of distributing these awards, and it was necessary that Congress should provide by law for their payment into the hands of the persons entitled thereto. While a bill for this purpose was pending, the Mexican Government notified the Secretary of State that evidence, not within its knowledge or control before the awards were rendered, had been discovered, which, it was claimed, would establish the fact that the awards in the cases of La Abra Company and Benjamin Weil were procured by fraudulent impositions upon the Commission and upon the Government of the United States, on the part of the claimants.

And the bill was not passed at that session on account of this showing.

At the next session Mr. Davis of Illinois introduced a bill in the Senate which, with amendments, passed both Houses, and was approved June 18, 1878. This act authorized the Secretary of State to make distribution to the claimants of the money received from Mexico on all the awards except those of La Abra Company and Weil. The fifth section of the act was as follows:

"SEC. 5. And whereas the Government of Mexico has called the attention of the Government of the United States to the claims hereinafter named with a view to a rehearing; Therefore, Be it enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate any charges of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the cases hereinafter named, and if he shall be of the opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law or considerations of justice and equity, require that the awards in the cases of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company, or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried, it shall be lawful for him to withhold payment of said awards, or either of them, until such case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress shall otherwise direct.

"And in case of such retrial and decision, any moneys paid or to be paid by the Republic of Mexico in respect of said awards respectively shall be held to abide the event, and shall be disposed of accordingly; and the said present awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed, as may be determined on such retrial: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an expression of any opinion of Congress in respect to the character of said claims, or either of them."

In accordance with the provisions of this section, the President [Mr. Hayes] caused an investigation to be made of the charges of fraud preferred by the Mexican Government, and Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, made a careful examination of the newly discovered evidence presented by Mexico, and submitted his conclusions thereon to the President August 12, 1879, to the effect:

"That the honor of the United States does require that these two cases should be further investigated by the United States to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing against a friendly power claims of her citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud."

Without following the history of this claim in the State Department, it is sufficient to say that every President and every Secretary of State since that time has been of the same opinion that President Hayes and Mr. Secretary Evarts were in 1878.

In the Fiftieth Congress the Committee on Foreign Relations were directed to examine this claim and to take testimony. They took a large amount of testimony, which they presented to the Senate to accompany the report from which I have been reading, in which they included all the documentary evidence, including the papers which were before the Mixed Commission. In the testimony which was before the committee were the original press copy letter books of the La Abra Company, containing press copies of the letters written by the agents of the company in Mexico to the officers in New York.

There were a considerable number of original letters also furnished and identified from the officers of the company in New York to the agents of the company in Mexico at the mines. These letters give a full history of the company's transactions in Mexico, and, leaving out of question the testimony of every witness who gave oral testimony before the Mixed Commission or before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, these press copies of letters written by the agents of the company in Mexico and original letters of officers written in New York, show conclusively the falsity of this claim. The committee, after considering all this testimony, made the report from which I again read:

In the opinion of the committee the correspondence between the company's superintendents and agents at the mines in Mexico and the managing agent of the company in New York, accompanying this report, is sufficient, considered alone, to show the whole claim of the company to be fraudulent, and the claimant's testimony before the Mixed Commission, so far as it tended to fix the responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government, to have been rank perjury to show that the company had abandoned its mines because they did not pay for working; that the officers and agents of the company in New York had refused to furnish any more money to the superintendents at the mines, and that the company was bankrupt.

The idea of making a claim against the Mexican Government by the company, judging from this correspondence, appears to have been conceived long after the abandonment of the mines by the company, to have been a gross fraud in its inception, to have been based upon fraudulent allegations supported by false swearing and manufactured testimony; and it is impossible, in the face of the correspondence covering the period when the company was making preparations to work its mines in Mexico and while they were being worked, to conceive that the officers and agents of the company in New York were not active participants in the fraud.

That is the report of the committee upon this testimony, which, as I say, included press copies of all the letters of the agents at the mines in Mexico to the agents and officers of the company in New York, and several original letters from the officers of the company in New York to their agents at the mines. The conclusion of the committee was that this claim was a gross fraud in its inception, that it was supported by false and fraudulent and manufactured testimony, and that it is impossible that the agents and officers of the company in New York should not have known its fraudulent character. I shall leave this case upon that statement of the committee upon this branch of it as to the facts, but if that statement of the committee is assailed by any Senator, I am prepared, by reference to copies of letters and original letters and other testimony, to show that every word of it is correct.

I now turn attention for a moment to the other question, as to whether, it being ascertained that this claim was founded in fraud, that this award was obtained by false testimony, that the United States was imposed upon in this matter, this Government has the power to return the money already paid by Mexico, and not distributed to these claimants, to the Government of Mexico, because I think no Senator will assert on this floor that, if this award was obtained by fraud, as is stated by the committee, and it shall be so ascertained by one of our own courts having jurisdiction to try the matter, and it is within the power of this Government to return that money, the honor of the Government does not require that it shall be returned.

The matter of this award has been several times in court, once recently, and I am not informed what the result has been if the case has been tried.

In the case of La Abra Company vs. Frelinghuysen (110 U. S.) the Supreme Court discusses the question of the finality of the award and the power of the Government (so long as the money is within its control) to inquire into the integrity of the claim, as between itself and the claimants, its own citizens. Chief-Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, held:

"There is no doubt that the provisions of the convention (of 1868) as to the conclusiveness of the awards are as strong as language can make them. * * * But this is to be construed as language used in a compact of two nations 'for the adjustment of the claims of the citizens of either * * * against the other,' entered into 'to increase the friendly feeling between' republics, and 'so to strengthen the system and principles of republican government on the American continent.' No nation treats with a citizen of another nation except through his government. The treaty, when made, represents a compact between the governments, and each government holds the other responsible for everything done by their respective citizens under it. The citizens of the United States having claims against Mexico were not parties to this convention. * * * The presentation by a citizen of a fraudulent claim or false testimony for reference to the Commission was an imposition on his own Government, and if that Government afterwards discovered that it had in this way been made an instrument of wrong towards a friendly power it would be not only its right, but its duty, to repudiate the act and make reparation as far as possible for the consequences of its neglect, if any there had been.

"International arbitration must always proceed on the principles of national honor and integrity. Claims presented and evidence submitted to such a tribunal must necessarily bear the impress of the entire good faith of the Government from which they come, and it is not to be presumed that any Government will for a moment allow itself knowingly to be made the instrument of wrong in any such proceeding. No technical rules of pleading, as applied in municipal courts, ought ever to be allowed to stand in the way of the national power to do what is right under all circumstances. * * * The United States, when they assumed the responsibility of presenting the claims of their citizens to Mexico for payment, entered into no contract obligations with the claimants to assume their frauds and to collect on their account all that, by their imposition of false testimony, might be given in the awards of the Commission. As between the United States and the claimants, the honesty of the claims is always open to inquiry for the purpose of fair dealing with the Government against which, through the United States, a claim has been made."

The report proceeds:

An examination of the action of Congress respecting claims adjudicated by virtue of international conventions will show that Congress has not regarded awards rendered on such claims as final and beyond its control. Within the last thirty years our Government has repeatedly reopened awards of this character, which have been rendered in accordance with the provisions of conventions containing stipulations making them final and conclusive between the parties to the convention.

The following is quoted from the brief of counsel in this case before the State Department, but was adopted by me for convenience:

To accomplish the annulment or revision of the awards almost every method of procedure known to modern jurisprudence or diplomatic practice has been resorted to by our Government to protect the honor of the nation or do justice to claimants. These procedures may be classified as follows:

First. By a resubmission of the cases on which awards had been rendered to a new international commission, as under the convention with Colombia and Venezuela.

Second. By an independent resort, through bills in equity, to the established domestic tribunals of the country, as in the Gardiner case under the treaty with Mexico of 1848, or in the Lazare case under the agreement with Haiti of 1884.

Third. By resubmission, through an act of Congress, to a special tribunal, as the Court of Claims, in the Atocha case under the Mexican treaty of 1848, or the "Caldera" case under the Chinese convention of 1858.

Fourth. By reference, through an act of Congress, to the Executive, clothing the Attorney-General with quasi-judicial functions, as in the case of Nott & Co. under the Chinese treaty of 1858.

Fifth. By a direct return of the money to the foreign government by the independent action of the Secretary of State and by act of Congress, without any judicial reëxamination or any hearing afforded the claimant, as in the "Caroline" case.

There are some members of the Committee on Foreign Relations who thought that that ought to be the action here; that we ought simply to return this money to the Government of Mexico without referring the case to the Court of Claims at all.

Now, this committee, in its report made at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress upon the bill (S. 2207) relating to the Benjamin Weil claim, discussing the power of Congress to reopen the award in that case, said:

The Committee on Foreign Relations are satisfied that there is no impediment of law or policy in the way of Congress to prevent the full examination of this award to Benjamin Weil in our own courts, and that the evidence presented to Congress to impeach the claim, both as to fraud and perjury, is of so convincing a nature as to make it our duty to our own country to require that this should be done.

This same claim was before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and in a report made by Representative, now Senator, DANIEL, at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, upon the bill (H. R. 8122) concerning the La Abra claim, and similar in its provisions to the bill under consideration, although reporting against the bill, the committee maintained the power of Congress to reopen the award, as follows:

We have no doubt that Congress may waive the benefits of the treaty with Mexico and reopen the case decided in favor of La Abra Company. Sir Edward Thornton took such power for granted as an attribute of our national sovereignty. The existence of such power is sustained by a number of precedents, and to a certain extent it has already been exercised by Congress in the act of 1878 suspending payment of the sums awarded and of which the present bill is amendatory. The President assumes and the Secretary of State asserts it, and in Key vs. Frelinghuysen, the Supreme Court affirmed it.

That is still another case, in which the Supreme Court affirmed the doctrine.

The minority of the committee, who reported in favor of the passage of the bill, upon this question said:

We hold that an examination of the legislative and diplomatic history of this country will show that the United States, both in its dealings with other governments and its own citizens, has never regarded the awards of commissions or final adjudications of claims as irrevocable where the honor of the nation was involved, and in many cases they have been set aside on behalf of claimants.

Mr. CHILTON. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I am not as familiar with this matter as other Senators who have been here longer, but I understand the bill only proposes to deal with the unexpended part of the award.

Mr. DOLPH. That is all.

Mr. CHILTON. There is nothing in the bill which could be construed as an engagement or acknowledgement on the part of our Government to reimburse Mexico for that part which has already been distributed?

Mr. DOLPH. No; it is conceded by both Governments, by the Mexican Government and by our own, that that award is conclusive and final, unless the United States chooses to take some action concerning it. Acting upon that theory, notwithstanding our Government ceased to distribute the annual payments upon this award to the La Abra Company and its assigns, the Mexican Government has paid the full amount of the award.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that part of it.

Mr. DOLPH. And the money is now in the State Department awaiting the action of Congress. There is legislation that is construed by the Department to prevent its payment to the La Abra Company or its assigns, and it remains there awaiting legislation.

The only thing that is proposed in this bill is to send these parties to the Court of Claims, allowing the claimants to use all the testimony that was used before the Mixed Commission, and having the question there adjudicated as to whether this claim was or was not procured by false swearing and by fraudulent practices, and whether the Government of the United States was imposed upon, so as to determine what the honor of the United States requires to be done in the premises, it being provided in the bill that if it shall be adjudged by the court of appeals that the award was procured by false swearing and fraudulent imposition upon the Government of the United States, then the Government of the United States shall return to Mexico the unexpended amount of the award, which is now awaiting the action of Congress in the State Department. But the bill has nothing whatever to do with the amount which has been distributed to the claimants.

Mr. CHILTON. That was the point I wanted information upon.

Mr. DOLPH. No proposition is made to attempt to recover it from them, or to obtain judgment against them, or to return it to the Mexican Government.

I think, from these citations which I have read, and I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate, the power of the Government of the United States to return the undistributed award, that portion of the award in this case which is in the State Department and has not been distributed, to the Mexican Government is undoubted. And I do not propose to discuss either branch of the question longer.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator what is the amount of the award still held in our hands?

Mr. DOLPH. I stated a moment ago that the original amount of the award in American gold was $672,070.99. The amount which has been distributed to the claimants is $240,683.06, leaving something over half of it that is still undistributed.

Mr. VEST addressed the Senate. Having spoken for some time——

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Missouri has something further to say, and I understand he is entirely willing to yield to a motion to adjourn. As there are not Senators enough here to hold an executive session, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the bill pending before the Senate gives a new trial to Mexico as to all the issues involved in the original award. It is true that Mexico is not made a party to the record. The suit, according to the provisions of the bill, is to be instituted by the United States against the La Abra Company. But the bill also provides that all the evidence taken before the Mixed Commission shall be placed before the Court of Claims. It further provides that process shall issue from the Court of Claims in order to enforce its finding; and it provides that if the court shall be of opinion that the award before the Mixed Commission in favor of the La Abra Company was obtained by fraud or false swearing, then the President of the United States shall pay back to Mexico the amount in the State Department at the time of this decision by the Court of Claims; and that an appeal may be taken from the decision of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court.

The difficulty presented to my mind in regaid to these provisions of the bill is, first, how is the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States to determine that this award was obtained from the umpire, Sir Edward Thornton, by fraud and false swearing? The bill provides that if the court shall find that any portion of the award was so obtained, although a part of it may appear to have been just and fairly recoverable, the President of the United States shall pay the amount so obtained and remaining in the office of the Secretary of State over to Mexico.

I call the attention of Senators, and especially those of us who are lawyers, to the language of the bill. It does not provide that if there shall be fraud and perjury, but if there shall be fraud and false swearing, which is a very different thing. There may be false swearing without any criminal motive on the part of the witness. The testimony may be entirely honest and fair and proper, but a mistake. But if there be perjury it is with criminal intent and it is willful falsehood. This bill does not mention perjury.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. What difference does it make to the unfortunate creditor whose rights have been destroyed by the mistake, whether it was willful or accidental?

Mr. VEST. It makes this difference, that if those statements were matters of opinion, for instance, as to the amount of damages, and they were honestly given, then neither litigant has a right to complain, if the umpire should have assumed, or should in the exercise of his judgment have given the weight of the evidence against the party that now complains of the award. If, on the other hand, there was perjury, willful and deliberate false swearing, it was an outrage, as a matter of course, upon the parties involved in the suit who were honestly inclined, and an outrage upon the Government of the United States, which had agreed to this arbitration, and it was an outrage upon Mexico.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to say that I think the question of perjury is not material in the investigation of the rights of litigants? It would be material when a criminal prosecution was entered against the witness, but in no other proceeding whatever.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I differ with the Senator from Mississippi in this: If he were a judge upon the bench in this case and a motion was entered for a new trial, and the evidence showed that witnesses had given their opinions fairly and honestly, but were mistaken in regard to it, that opportunity was given to both parties to bring in the opinion, say of experts or others, and the umpire has given its judgment as to the weight of that evidence and there has been no willful false swearing in the case, it would make a very different case as to the decision of the question in the one aspect or the other.

Mr. GEORGE. With the Senator's permission I will state that the gist of a proceeding for a new trial is that wrong has been done to one of the parties, and it makes no difference as to the right of the wronged party to redress that the wrong has been perpetrated or has been based upon a simple mistake. It is error, and whether it be a willful error or not, the wrong is the same, and the man is injured; the man has lost his property; the man has been deprived of his rights; and whether upon a falacy or a falsehood, whether it be willful or otherwise, can make no difference to him or in matter of justice and right.

Mr. CHILTON. As a matter of information, I should like to know how long it was after this award was made before the attempt to correct it was inaugurated on the part of the United States Government?

Mr. VEST. On the part of the United States Government there was no attempt to correct it for some two or three years, I think, after the rendering of the award by the umpire. The first attention that was called to it, I believe, was under the Administration of Mr. Hayes. I believe a letter appears from Gen. Grant in this mass of testimony, amounting to two or three thousand pages, but that it was an official letter I am not prepared to say. My impression is that it was not, but that Mr. Hayes first called attention to the duty of the United States to Mexico, and there is a communication here from Mr. Evarts in regard to this matter, giving his opinion about it, in which he says that the question is as to the damages. He does not believe that the honor of the United States or that equity demands that the award should be reopened as to all the issues, but he said that it was a question simply of exaggerated damages, and that opinion was afterwards repeated by Secretary Bayard under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. CHILTON. How long was it before the first installment would be payable?

Mr. VEST. The record here shows the exact dates, but I think it was paid in 1877.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It was some considerable length of time before Mexico discovered the evidence to show that fraud existed and that perjury had been used in the case. Therefore it was some considerable length of time before the United States had notice that there was any such thing as fraud in the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. And allow me to add that in cases of concealed fraud no limitation runs except from the time of the discovery of the fraud.

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President, but that is in regard to extrinsic fraud, and not as to fraud which was in issue at the trial.

When called off by these interruptions I was about to answer the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the new-trial question which he submitted to me. The Supreme Court of the United States, in its decision in the case of Frelinghuysen vs. Key, put the right of the United States to examine into this question upon these grounds and these grounds alone. I quote from the decision of the court:

> The United States, when they assumed the responsibility of presenting the claims of their citizens to Mexico for payment, entered into no contract obligations with the claimants to assume their frauds and to collect on their account all that, by their imposition of false testimony, might be given in the awards of the Commission. As between the United States and the claimants, the honesty of the claims is always open to inquiry for the purposes of fair dealing with the Government against which, through the United States, a claim has been made.

As between its citizens and the Government of the United States it always has the right to examine into the good faith of the claim as presented by its own citizens. I do not contravene that proposition, but I submit that, after the very question of fraud in the transaction itself has been presented, argued, and determined by the court, then it is no ground for reopening the whole award and giving a new trial upon all the issues to say that there is other evidence to show fraud which the party has afterwards discovered—not proof of extrinsic fraud, but simply proof as to the identical issue which was put before that court and which was under litigation for five long years.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Was not the language which he read used by the court with reference to this very case?

Mr. VEST. Certainly it was; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, with reference to the facts of this very case, the Supreme Court has decided that there is no limitation upon the right of the Government of the United States to investigate this matter?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, and I am not arguing that proposition. The only issue I make in regard to that is whether the proper manner has been adopted by Congress as to examining into this question, and it raises the very serious question whether we are not now invading the domain of the political or executive department by determining this question or attempting to determine it, as is proposed to be done by this bill.

If the Senator had permitted me I had intended to read from this opinion further, to show that the Supreme Court never, for one instant, contemplated that this matter should be reopened and retried in a domestic or municipal court of the United States. The court says:

> The fifth section—

Referring to the bill of 1878—

> The fifth section, as we construe it, is nothing more than an expression by Congress in a formal way of its desire that the President will, before he makes any payment on the Weil or La Abra claims, investigate the charges of fraud presented by Mexico, "and if he shall be of the opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or considerations of justice and equity require that the awards, * * * or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried," that he will "withhold payment * * * until the case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree"—

Until it shall be retried in such manner as the United States and Mexico may agree—> or until Congress shall otherwise direct.

Now, it is assumed here by Mexico that the words "or until Congress shall otherwise direct" give plenary power in Congress to send this case to the municipal courts of the United States. Any lawyer who will examine this language will see that the phrase "until Congress shall otherwise direct" simply applies to the question whether the Secretary of State shall pay over this money or not, and it does not refer to the mode in which the issue shall be determined.

I submit, in all fairness, that the Supreme Court has never decided that the Court of Claims or any other municipal tribunal in this country had jurisdiction of this matter.

How did this question come to Congress? It came at the instance of the President through the State Department, in the language of a communication quoted here, in which the President, through the Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts, said to Congress that he had grave doubts in regard to the damages in the La Abra case and as to the whole cause of action in the Weil case; but that the executive department of the Government could not examine into these questions so as to satisfy itself, as it did not have the power to coerce the attendance of witnesses. It was a suggestion that Congress should provide the means of doing, what? Not of retrying the whole case, but of satisfying the political department of the Government that this fraud had been perpetrated. There is not one thing in the decision of the Supreme Court, there is not one single idea in the communications from the State Department at any time which goes to the effect that Congress was to invade the domain of the political management of our affairs with foreign nations and retry the case before a municipal tribunal. The Supreme Court goes on further to say:

> This is far from making the President for the time being a quasi judicial tribunal to hear Mexico and the implicated claimants and determine once for all as between them, whether the charges which Mexico makes have been judicially established. In our opinion it would have been just as competent for President Hayes to have instituted the same inquiry without this request as with it, and his action with the statute in force is no more binding on his successor than it would have been without. But his action, as reported by him to Congress, is not at all inconsistent with what has since been done by President Arthur. He was of opinion that the disputed "cases should be further investigated by the United States to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing against a friendly power claims of our citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud," and, by implication at least, he asked Congress to provide him the means of "instituting and furnishing methods of investigation which can coerce the production of evidence or compel the examination of parties or witnesses." He did report officially that he had "grave doubt as to the substantial integrity of the Weil claim," and the "sincerity of the evidence as to the measure of damages insisted upon and accorded in the case of the La Abra * * * company."
> The report of Mr. Evarts can not be read without leaving the conviction that if the means had been afforded the inquiries which Congress asked for would have been further prosecuted. The concluding paragraph of the report is nothing more than a notification by the President that unless the means are provided he will consider that the wishes of Congress have been met, and that he will act on such evidence as he has been able to obtain without the help he wants.

In accordance with the views I have read here of the two administrations, first of Hayes, and next that of Cleveland, both going upon the assumption that the damages had been exaggerated, but that the other issues in the case had been fairly decided in favor of the La Abra Company, what was done? With these facts before us we voted twice in the Senate upon treaties in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court reopening the question between this Government and Mexico——

Mr. MORGAN. Not upon two treaties?

Mr. VEST. I mean to say that we voted twice upon it, after long and anxious debate and deliberation, the Senate as a part of the political power of the Government—the President and the Senate acting upon treaties—refused to reopen this question, and that should have been a finality.

Mr. GEORGE. Did not the treaty fail for the want of the necessary two-thirds vote, a large majority voting for it?

Mr. VEST. What is the difference in regard to the constitutional provision and the legal effect? If a treaty fails by one vote of having the necessary two-thirds to ratify it, it is dead.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course it is dead.

Mr. VEST. Then why does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the question for the reason that the case was not res adjudicata by the Senate, as showing that the Senate had deliberately decided that there was no remedy needed in this case, when a large majority of the Senate decided that there was a remedy needed, and we ought to grant it.

Mr. VEST. I speak about the action of the Senate under the Constitution and according to law. It is not a mass meeting, but under the Constitution it requires two-thirds to affirm a treaty, and I cite it to show that an appeal was made to the Senate or to the treaty-making power of the Government, where it ought to have been made, and where I contend here to-day alone rests the power to reopen and retry this case, and the Senate of the United States, by a Constitutional majority, decided not to take up the case and not to retry it.

Yet, notwithstanding the provision in the convention that submitted these awards to a commissioner from each Government and then to an umpire, Sir Edward Thornton, that the judgment should be binding without objection—without delay—after this appeal was made to the Senate and solemnly determined; and with this new evidence before it, this letter-book that is now brought in here and paraded as conclusive of this case—notwithstanding that Mexico, still not satisfied, employs an agent and counsel and detectives to follow this case into another channel, and seeks to make the United States Government prosecute her claim in a municipal court here, and after, as I shall show, all the witnesses upon our side of any consequence are dead.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] interjected the remark that false swearing had been discovered after the award. Permit me now to read from the decision of the umpire in regard to that matter. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this case was under consideration for five years. The whole power of the Mexican Government with all its instrumentalities was brought to bear in order to bring evidence before the umpire. They were notified in regard to this testimony. Thirty of their own citizens were sworn in this case, and on the motion for a rehearing which was filed by Mr. Zamacona, or by Mr. Avila, Zamacona being one of the commissioners, perjury was charged upon every man who had sworn for the La Abra Company.

Thirty of these witnesses were Mexican citizens, and if my strength permitted me I would read the motion for a rehearing in which every one of them is taken up, man by man, and charged with deliberate perjury; and yet not a single one of these witnesses has ever been prosecuted for perjury in the Mexican courts. No attempt has ever been made to punish them. They have been permited to go unwhipped of justice, if these allegations be true.

The Senator from Maine says that fraud and false swearing came to light afterwards. Now, let us see if it did. Sir Edward Thornton, the umpire, in deciding the motion for a new trial, said:

> The motions to rehear which accompany the above-mentioned cases are not merely a request to reconsider them, but are a critical review, particularly on the part of the agent of Mexico, of the grounds upon which the umpire has founded his decision. It is argued that they are all ill founded and erroneous. This may be the case. The umpire does not pretend to be infallible, but he has decided to the best of his ability and conscience upon the papers which have been submitted to him. It is clear that whichever way his decision may have turned the claimant or defendant could always have found arguments to dispute its correctness and justice. Indeed, an impartial umpire is generally subjected to such criticisms.
> In his motions to rehear, the agent of Mexico has stated many facts which may be capable of proof, but which have not been proved by the papers submitted to the umpire. He has also shown immense ability in disputing the observations made by the umpire in support of his decisions, and in examining and discussing the merits of the claims with the greatest minuteness and detail; and the umpire is painfully impressed with the feeling that he might with fairness have been allowed the advantage of the searching examination of the agent of Mexico when these claims were first submitted to him, rather than after he had decided upon them. There was at that time better cause for doing so than there is now, for one of the two commissioners had already decided in favor of these claims before they came to the umpire. The latter is but one of three judges, and he would have been glad to have been favored and assisted by the minute criticism which the Mexican agent has now bestowed upon some of these claims.

The umpire further goes on to say:

> The decisions of the umpire, without his wishes being consulted, have generally been made public both here and in Mexico. It is known that by the convention they are final and without appeal. It is not impossible, and indeed it is very probable, that some of the claimants in whose favor awards have been made may have been able to obtain, on the credit of these final decisions, advances of money, or other values, or may have sold and entirely assigned away, to other persons not previously interested in the claims, the whole amount of the awards. The umpire is aware that by the law of the United States (Revised Statutes, section 3477) transfers and assignments of claims against the United States are null and void unless made after the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof. But he does not believe that this law comprises claims against Mexico, although they may finally be paid through the Treasury of the United States; and there is no doubt that what is supposed, on the faith of the convention, to be a final decision of a claim, would give the claimant a credit of which he would be able and likely to avail himself. It is, therefore, highly probable that the alteration or reversal of a decision might seriously prejudice the interest of other parties besides the claimant, parties who were in no way concerned in the origin of the claim.

Now, Mr. President, in this connection permit me to say that all the personal interest, if it may be so termed, that I have in this case grows out of the fact that in the State of Missouri are a number of orphans and widows whose entire estate of every description is in what they believe justly to be due them from this award. They have been guilty of no subornation of perjury. They certainly are innocent parties. They had nothing to do with the outrages which the Mexican Government charge, and which Senators charge were perpetrated in this case. Their fathers and ancestors are dead and unable to explain the charge of perjury that is now made against them. Sixteen years have elapsed since this trial. Five years were given to Mexico to bring in all its evidence.

Is it fair, just, and right, when we invoke national honor in this case, that we should overlook the rights of our own citizens? When we invoke what is called in this bill law and equity, when we grant a new trial, as the Senator from Mississippi says, for he assumes this to be a proceeding of that sort, is it right that we should overlook this long lapse of time and the failure on the part of Mexico to produce testimony when she could have done so, and when these men were living and could have confronted the charges brought against them? The evidence of the Weil case——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator has investigated that case very fully, I should like to ask him if he has any doubt of the fraudulent character of the claim.

Mr. VEST. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; most unquestionably, or I would not be here upon this floor arguing as I am.

Mr. GEORGE. I am speaking of the claim, now, of Weil.

Mr. VEST. I am not speaking about the Weil case. I am confining myself to the La Abra case. I have never investigated the Weil case.

Mr. GEORGE. You do not say anything about that?

Mr. VEST. No, except I will say this, and I give the Senator the benefit of it: Whether the Weil case be grounded in fraud or not, whether its pages be black and damnable with perjury or not, whether all that has been said about it accumulated ten thousand times over be true or not, I say that Mexico has no place in court, even with all that admitted, after deliberately suppressing testimony, after deliberately admitting that they held tesimony that they did not propose to put in that case because it might be rebutted by living witnesses.

Zamacona, one of the commissioners representing Mexico, when called upon by the umpire to put in the testimony in that case, said "No." He was a true Mexican. He belonged to the Latin races. I know them. "No," he said, "I do not propose to put it in, because they would disprove it if I did." That was his statement, shown in this testimony. He held it back, and now, sixteen years afterward, when death has seized the men who are charged here with perjury, and whose descendants are to be deprived of their last dollar, we are told that equity and national honor and international comity demand that all this should be overlooked.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand——

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). To which Senator does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. I yield to anybody.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand the Senator, if he will not admit the injustice he will not affirm the justice of the Weil case.

Mr. VEST. I say this, that I have never examined the Weil case with any sort of minuteness, because I have given my attention to the La Abra case, in which my constituents were immediately interested, and because it was physically impossible for me to do so. The testimony in this case comprises over 2,000 pages, to say nothing of executive documents containing arguments, motions for a rehearing, and briefs of all sorts. I am not so fond of labor as to take up both cases if I can help it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine for a question?

Mr. VEST. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator having taken up to a certain extent only the Weil case and made a statement of opinion as to what ought to be done, I desire to ask him if the claim was founded on the seizure of three hundred mules and wagons and four hundred bales of cotton, and it turned out, conclusively proven, that there was not a mule, nor a wagon, nor a bale of cotton, would the Senator insist that the United States was not bound to restore that money to Mexico?

Mr. VEST. I have not said that, Mr. President.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I understood the Senator to say, because the Mexican——

Mr. VEST. I said this: That no matter what fraud might be proven, the fact still remains that Mexico had deliberately violated the rules of law and equity and of fair trial by withholding until all the witnesses were dead testimony that they had in their possession.

Mr. FRYE. And, therefore, the United States would be justified in keeping a million dollars which Mexico had paid, entirely, without any——

Mr. VEST. I confine myself to my statement, and I do not propose to be drawn away from it. I allude to what Mexico did. As to the conclusion that Senators may draw in regard to what ought to be done in the Weil case I have said nothing. I assert again that Mr. Zamacona declined to put in this testimony, and I have before me here the argument of the counsel for Mexico defending it. More than that, I assert that in this decision of the umpire, upon a motion for a rehearing in the La Abra case, he stated that the counsel for Mexico had declined to put in testimony from Philadelphia, although it was mentioned afterwards in the motion for a rehearing, and Sir Edward Thornton says to the counsel for Mexico, "it would have been better to have put that evidence in when the case was being tried than to bring it forward now for the first time in the motion for a rehearing."

Now, Mr. President, with a brief résumé of the facts, I will take up the proposition which I propose to discuss. In 1865 the La Abra Company, composed of a number of gentlemen from Missouri and New York, organized what might be called a syndicate to purchase certain mines in the San Dimas district in the State of Durango, in Old Mexico. These mines were located about 160 miles from Mazatlan on the coast. For 30 miles out of Mazatlan the country is as level as this floor. Then what is called the mountain region begins. Transportation during the rainy season, for about five or six months in the year, is absolutely impossible; the creeks become torrents and are impassable to man or beast. No wagon can go through those mountains, and all transportation after you reach them, even in the dry season, must be upon mules.

Two of these gentlemen, Mr. David J. Garth and Gen. Thomas J. Bartholow, citizens of Missouri (one of them still living, residing near the city of New York, formerly a banker in New York; Gen. Bartholow, is now dead, who was as well known as any man in the State of Missouri), went to Mexico on the part of their copromoters in order to investigate these mines. They purchased the La Abra mine, which was an old Spanish mine, worked by the Spaniards prior to 1820, when the Spanish domination prevailed in Mexico. They purchased the La Abra mine, which gave the name to this company, for $22,000, and that purchase money was paid in stock of the company. No money passed in consideration. After arriving there and investigating the other mines, the La Luz, the Rosario, the El Cristo, and one or two others, all in the same mountain, they concluded to purchase the whole group, and they then paid to a Mexican who owned those mines $50,000 in gold, so that the purchase money for all the mines together amounted to $72,000—$22,000 in stock and $50,000 in money.

Mr. Garth went back to the city of New York and left Gen. Bartholow to act as superintendent of the mines. The testimony here shows that difficulties commenced with the Mexican authorities immediately after Garth left there and under Bartholow's administration. Gen. Bartholow states in his testimony that an entire mule train loaded with machinery and supplies was seized by Mexican troops, for the war was then raging between the imperialists and the liberals, the adherents of Maximilian and those of Juarez in Mexico. The train was seized, and he never received one dollar either for the mules, or for the property with which they were loaded.

The point is made in the case that Gen. Bartholow stated that the mules belonged to the company. The evidence does not support that assertion. A portion of the mules did belong to the company. He states in his evidence that he had one hundred and seventy mules in one train that were bringing a ten-stamp mill, the portions of it, together withprovisions and supplies to Tayoltita, which was a little village of three or four houses in the immediate vicinity of this group of mines. The whole one hundred and seventy mules did not belong to the La Abra Company. Some of them belonged to the company and some of them were hired from Mexicans. First he paid $8 a carga, as it is called in Mexico. A carga is 1,500 pounds, 500 pounds less than a ton. First he paid $8 a carga for transporting the supplies from Mazatlan to Tayoltita, where the mines were located. Afterwards, on account of the disturbed condition of the country, the price went up from $8 to $16 a carga, and this enormous transportation was paid for eighteen months. The amount paid gradually increased as the country became more and more disturbed.

Gen. Bartholow states (and I believe him against, I was going to say, any number of Mexicans) that one of his men named Grove, from Saline County, Mo., whose family I know very well, in charge of one of these trains of mules, or about to take charge, was deliberately murdered, it being believed by the Mexican who killed him that he had $4,000 in gold with which to pay for some mules to bring supplies over the mountains. The fact was Gen. Bartholow explained that in order to secure anything like protection for his property he was forced to put it in the hands of Americans; that is to say, if the mules that were transporting the supplies at so much a carga to the mines were known to be the property of Mexicans, they would be seized by one party or the other; but they still had a wholesome dread of the United States, and if an American were supposed to own them then there was a reasonable degree of safety in using the mules for transportation purposes. Bartholow says that the title of these mules was put in the name of Grove, and Grove stated to a Mexican at whose house he stayed all night that he had bought the train of mules himself for $4,000, and they believed that he had the money, and his body was found upon the roadside the next day.

Mr. MORGAN. That man was killed by an employé of the company.

Mr. VEST. He was killed, as the evidence shows, through a conspiracy. The man might have been in the employ of the company, but he was a Mexican. Grove was no Mexican. I know Grove's family, in Saline County. I know there is not a drop of Mexican or Spanish blood in any of them. Grove went to Mexico at the close of the war, having served in Parson's brigade in the Confederate army. He was a Missourian, born in Saline County. He was killed by a Mexican, and whether the Mexican was or had been in the employ of the company does not matter. Another train of mules was seized, and the man in charge of them was never heard of afterwards.

Mr. DOLPH. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. VEST. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state that the whole story of the mules owned by the company, in connection with the robbery and murder of Grove, was fabricated. The committee say in regard to Grove:

A minute account of the robbery of Scott and the murder of Grove is contained in a letter found in the letter book, from Superintendent Bartholow to the treasurer of the company in New York, from which it appears that they were both traveling alone, and neither had charge of or was in company with mule trains, and nowhere in the whole correspondence is any reference made to the loss of any mule train owned by the company.

The murder of Grove is thus described in the claimant's memorial:

That is a memorial filed before the Mexican Mixed Commission.

"Things finally got to such a pass that one of the personnel of the company, in charge of one of its trains, was openly killed by the Liberal forces, and the train seized, and that was made boast of by Mexican officials, etc."

This murder was reported by the superintendent to the New York office, with all the detailed circumstances attending it, in two letters, dated March 7 and April 10, 1866, copies of which are found in the letter book.

Press copies which were identified by the agent of the company, who was in charge there for over a year.

In these letters it is stated that Grove was traveling alone; that he lost his life by his own imprudence in revealing the fact that he had in his possession a large sum of money; that he was killed by one of the company's own employés, and that the authorities arrested, tried, and executed the murderer with commendable promptness.

In regard to the mule train the evidence is just as conclusive that the company never owned a mule train, and hired all their freighting. The only mules owned by the company were a few which were used about the mine, and which were in the inventories turned over.

Mr. VEST. I said, Mr. President, and if I am compelled to do it, I will read the whole evidence here in regard to it——

Mr. DOLPH. You will have to do so if you insist on one of those statements being true.

Mr. VEST. Grove—that is the point I was making—had the title to a train of mules put in his name because he was an American, in order to prevent their being seized by the Mexican Government. He stopped at the house of this Mexican, whether an employé of the company or not. First and last, all the Mexicans of that vicinity were in the employ of that company. He stopped at this house and told this man, in order to carry out the scheme, whatever it was, between him and Bartholow, to protect the property, that the mules belonged to him; that he had purchased them for $4,000.

I did not say he was in charge of them. He was then going to take possession of them and expected to do it the next day, and his imprudence that is spoken of in that report is the fact that he told this Mexican that he had the $4,000 to pay for these mules. The point I make is that, in order to protect the property, such was the condition of the country, it was necessary to make the impression that it belonged to an American citizen to keep the Mexicans from one side or the other from taking it. Another train of mules and the man in charge of it, according to this evidence, disappeared and were never heard of afterwards.

The letter that Gen. Bartholow wrote to Mr. Garth, found in the letter-press book, does not contradict the statement that some of the mules belonged to that company. Whether Bartholow or the company had paid for them does not appear in the evidence, but Bartholow speaks of them as my mules, the company's mules, and it is fair to presume he was carrying out the same purpose which obtained in the Grove case, taking title in the company as an American company, or in himself as an American citizen, in order to protect them from seizure.

Mr. President, it is a matter of history, and it ought to be known to every Senator without evidence, that there was existing in Mexico at that time hostility and prejudice against the people of the United States and a disposition to ignore any rights upon their part.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, if it is an interruption, but on the question of the Grove matter I wish to say that I do not know how to make the truth appear better than from the statements of Mr. Bartholow's own letters to Mr. Garth, the treasurer of the company. If the Senator will permit me to read it, in a letter written March 7, 1866, to David G. Garth, esq., dated at La Abra Silver Mining Company, Tayoltita, he says:

In my last letter I informed you that one of my employés, William Grove, esq., formerly of Saline County, Mo., was missing, and I feared had been waylaid and murdered; since then my worst fears have been realized, for after a search of two weeks his body was found buried in the sand on the bank of the Piastla River, some 10 miles above the mouth of Candalaro Creek, near where he had been murdered. At the time of the discovery of the body it was in such an advanced state of decomposition that it was impossible to ascertain the manner in which he had been killed. His mule, pistol, and clothing have not yet been found; the mule is, however, likely to turn up, as it had our hacienda brand, "U. S.," on the left shoulder. These facts were promptly laid before the commander of the Liberal troops at San Ignacio, Señor D. Jesus Vega, who took great interest in the matter and promised to use all the means in his power to discover the murderers and bring them to justice, and he has had arrested and placed in confinement two men charged with the crime, and his soldiers are in pursuit of the third. These we are assured will be tried by court-martial, and if found guilty will be summarily executed. Mr. Grove, I think, lost his life by imprudence in talking; he had resided in Mexico for six or seven years, spoke the language quite fluently, and ought to have undertstood the character of the people.

I had nominally purchased a train of pack mules in Mr. Grove's name, and sent him to San Ignacio to obtain a permit for them to pack for me, and a guaranty that they would not be taken by the army; he succeeded in getting these documents and was on his way home to take possession of the mules and start them to packing; he passed the night previous to his death at the house of one Meliton, at Techamate, the place where you will recollect we stopped for dinner on our first trip up, where we had quite a quantity of watermelons. This man Meliton had a bad reputation, was some years ago convicted of murder and robbery and sentenced to be executed, but got clear by bribery. Grove told this man of his purchase of the pack train, and that he was to pay $4,000 for it, and was on his way to take possession of it and start it to work, thus leaving the impression that he had this sum of money with him. Now, whilst I do not think that Meliton committed the murder, I have no doubt of his having planned it and arranged for it to be done, and the imprudence of Mr. G. in telling this man the circumstances above mentioned, in my opinion, was the cause which led to his murder, which was effected between Techamate and Tenchuguilita, about midway between the two places.

Then, in a subsequent letter found on page 256 of this book, Mr. Bartholow in a letter to Mr. Garth again refers to this matter. He says:

I wrote you fully in my last letter detailing the circumstances of the murder of William Grove and the finding of his body. Since then the Liberal authorities have taken the matter in hand and arrested one of the murderers at this place. The villain was actually in our employ—doubtless for the purpose of ascertaining when an opportunity should offer to waylay and murder another of our men if the prospect for plunder was sufficient to warrant the risk. When the officers arrested I had him conveyed to the blacksmith shop and securely ironed. The next day he was conveyed to San Ignacio and thence to Cosala, where he was tried. We failed to convict him for the murder of Grove, but was convicted for the murder of a woman who he killed previously, and sentenced to be shot, and before the execution of the sentence he confessed the murder of Grove, and revealed the names of his two confederates; these two would have been arrested before this but for the expulsion of the Liberals from the country. Now we will have to wait for the Imperialists to put their officers in power before we can act any further in the matter.

He was one of the men employed at the mines—

Showing that this man Grove was murdered by an employé of the company, and that the murderer was promptly arrested, tried, and shot.

Mr. TELLER. Who owned the mules mentioned there?

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. Bartholow says he had arranged for a nominal purchase of these mules in Mr. Grove's name, and to have them transferred, but they never were transferred; they were never paid for; the purchase was never consummated; the company never owned a train of pack mules. So much for that one statement. These extracts are from the letters of Mr. Bartholow found in the press letter book of the company; they appear, and the handwriting was identified by the agent of the company who was in charge of the mines for over a year, and there can be no dispute about the facts stated in them. That disposes of one of these great outrages committed by Mexicans, and I undertake to say that every one of them contained in that memorial will be disposed of in the same way if the Senator disputes the correctness of the report.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will permit each of us for himself to decide whether that disposes of the question. My statement was this, and there is no material discrepancy between his statement of the facts and mine. I was trying to find here in this labyrinth of printed testimony the statement of Gen. Bartholow, made during his lifetime and when he was subject to cross-examination, in regard to this transaction. I repeat, the facts were simply these: This man Grove was engaged in freighting with mules for the La Abra Company. At the close of the war he had left Parsons's brigade, when it was disbanded, and gone to Mexico and secured employment with the company.

The condition of the country was such, and property was so insecure that Gen. Bartholow said he determined to put the title to this train of mules in Grove because he was an American citizen. He does not say that he paid the money, but Grove told this Mexican, who, they say, was in the employ of the company—and that does not affect the case at all—that he had bought the mules for $4,000 and was on his way to take possession. The Mexican, with the instinct of his race, jumped to the conclusion that he had the money, and the next day Grove was butchered and his body was found on the road. The point I make is, there is nothing to show who owned the mules, except the statement of Bartholow, both in the letter and in the examination, when he was living, and that was that he found it necessary to put the title, as he expressed it, in Grove.

Mr. TELLER. The title of the mules belonging to the company?

Mr. VEST. Yes; Bartholow was superintendent of the company. Grove was in the employ of the company for freighting purposes. I mention that fact in order to show that the company, which it is said was amply protected by the Mexican Government and that it had no right to complain of its usage by the Mexican officials, was forced to resort to all sorts of subterfuges, to all sorts of expedients, to use a more proper term, in order to protect its trains bringing supplies over to Tayoltita from being seized by one party or the other.

Mr. DOLPH. Does not the fact that he proposed to put the title of the train in an American show that the American had peculiar privileges and protection in Mexico.

Mr. VEST. It shows that if the mules were lost there would be a claim, as Bartholow himself expressed it, against the Mexican Government. It was the only shadow he had of any redress at all. They were seizing property there and forcing contributions. Bartholow says that he appealed to Corona, the general in command, for protection to his property. He did not receive it. He wrote him a communication. No protection was given to him, and, as I shall show before I conclude, every official of the Mexican Government was in a conspiracy to drive this company out of the territory of Mexico, and they succeeded at last in doing it, and one of them then took possession of the hacienda de La Abra and, at last accounts, was living in it with his family. The hostility of the Mexican population to the American, and especially among the lower orders, is so well known that there is no evidence necessary in order to prove it.

The records of the Mixed Commission show that Gen. Parsons, in whose brigade Grove had served, together with his adjutant, Standish, Col. Conrow, and a man named Dutch Bill, the servant of Standish, were all murdered about this time. They were hung, and the bodies riddled with bullets, and they were found there in a nude condition. The Mixed Commission awarded $75,000 to the family of Bartholow, $50,000 to that of Conrow, and $50,000 to that of Standish, and I believe $15,000 to that of the servant, Dutch Bill, who were murdered without any reason except that they were American citizens.

There is a witness who appears in this case about whose testimony there is no sort of controversy as to its integrity and good faith, and that is Col. De Lagnel. He was the second superintendent of the company.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator can not find anything in his testimony to support one of those propositions.

Mr. VEST. Very good; we shall see whether I can or not.

Mr. DOLPH. I admit that his testimony is worthy of credence.

Mr. VEST. Very good; now we will see what he says. The Senator from Oregon is very profuse and broad in his assertions.

I intend to read now from Report No. 2705, by Mr. DOLPH, Fiftieth Congress, second session, and I shall read the testimony of De Lagnel.

Mr. DOLPH. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. VEST. If I can find it I will give the page. I will turn in a few moments to the testimony of De Lagnel, which I wanted to read from his own lips. It was to this effect, that he found great prejudice and hostility existing among the Mexican population against the Americans generally, and that the impression had gone out among them that the Americans intended to seize the State of Durango. He said that this prejudice extended so far that when he conversed with a young man he had in his employ, a mere boy, in regard to his feeling towards the Americans, he stated that he hated the whole race, and that he had been taught to hate them by his father. There is no question in regard to the testimony of De Lagnel, and he testifies most emphatically to the extent of this feeling. Does the Senator from Oregon dispute that proposition?

Mr. DOLPH. What is the question of the Senator?

Mr. VEST. I say that De Lagnel testified, if I could turn to his testimony here, that the hostility among the Mexicans was general towards the Americans; that he had in his employ a lad who told him that he hated the whole race of Americans; that he had been taught to hate them by his father.

Mr. DOLPH. I think there is something of that kind in the testimony, but that is entirely foreign to this case.

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. DOLPH. All testimony shows in this case that not only the company and its employés were protected by the Mexican Government, but that they got unusual favors in regard to working their mines and furnishing their transportation and other things during the time the company was in possession of the mines.

Mr. VEST. Now, I deny that proposition, and I say the evidence shows, taking alone the testimony of witnesses on the part of the Mexican Government itself, that this hostility existed among all the people of Mexico, including the officials. It shows that the jefe politico, who was the highest officer in the district, and the prefect, and the justice of the peace all conspired and swore afterwards that they intended to run this company out of the country.

There are two propositions in this case upon which it depends. The first is as to the value of the mines, and that was the point which was raised by Mr. Evarts. He said that issue alone was open, and it was afterwards repeated by Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State under Mr. Cleveland.

Now, what is the testimony in regard to the value of the mines? I will say, in the first place, before coming to that point, that there is no dispute about one proposition, and that is that this was a bona fide company which expended $303,000, according to the testimony of the witnesses from Mexico itself, in carrying out a ten-stamp mill, and in putting it up, in furnishing supplies, and in expenses incident to the mining business. The evidence shows that they expended from first to last over $450,000. Mr. Garth himself advanced $50,000 at one time. The whole of the stock was paid up in full. No bonds were floated upon the community. No stock was put up at a fictitious valuation. The money paid by these gentleman was lost in Mexico.

There is no parallel between this and the Gardiner case, where it turned out there was no mine at all, and the whole thing existed simply in imagination.

Now, as to the products of the mines anterior to their purchase by the company, I read from the majority report:

> At the mines the representatives of the syndicate were shown very rich specimens of ores, assaying as high as $1,300 per ton, and as a result of their investigation they made a purchase on the spot of La Abra mine, paying for the same $22,000 in stock of the company. They also bought of a Spaniard and a Mexican a number of other mines at the same place, and paid for them $50,000 in gold. These mines were represented to be at that time producing very rich ores, and the syndicate were shown by the owners "stacks of silver, * * * some tons of pure silver," the supposed recent products of these latter mines.

This is from the report of the Senator from Oregon.

> Without meaning to say—

Says Senator Brown in his minority report—> that the products of these mines were in no wise exaggerated by their Mexican vendors, the undersigned submits that the following statements, put in evidence by the Mexican Government, show that the property purchased by the company was of substantial value for the purposes of mining. Patricio Camacho testified (Appendix, p. 413):

> "That he has been acquainted with the mining district of Tayoltita since his infancy; that before the mines which have been named over to him became the property of the Americans, they were owned by D. Juan Castillo de Valle and D. Ygnacio Manjarrez, to whom they were productive of some profits, but to what amount he does not know. * * * That the American company directed their attention to the Rosario mine on account of what it yielded to its former owners, Castillo and Manjarrez."
> Bartolo Rodriguez, who had been in the employ of the company, testified (ibid., p. 414):
> "That he has known the mineral of Tayoltita for fifteen years; that the owners were D. Juan Castillo and D. Ygnacio Manjarrez, who worked the mines that have been mentioned to him with profit, and that these afterwards sold them to the American company. * * * That it is true that the American company gave their attention to the Rosario mine on account of knowing the yield of silver that D. Juan Castillo was obtaining therefrom."
> Ramon Aguirre testified (ibid., p. 415):
> "That it is more than fifteen years since he became acquainted with the mineral district of Tayoltita; and that he knows the owners of the mines that have been named over to him to have been Juan Castillo de Valle and D. Ygnacio Manjarrez, who afterward, with the hacienda and everything connected therewith, sold the same to the Americans; that said mines were productive of profit to said Castillo and Manjarrez, but to what extent he can not say, as he is not informed. * * * That the American company gave the most of their attention to the working of the Rosario mine because they were aware of the amount of silver extracted therefrom by Messrs. Juan Castillo and D. Ygnacio Manjarrez."
> Aquilino Calderon, who also had been in the employ of the company, testified (p. 416):
> "That he has been acquainted with the mineral districts of Tayoltita for several years; that D. Juan Castillo and Ygnacio Manjarrez were the owners of the mines which have been named over to him, who sold the mines and haciendas to the Americans in the year 1865; that when Messrs. Castillo and Manjarrez were working the mines he was aware that they produced good profits."
> Refugio Fonseca testified also to "good profits" (ibid., p. 416), and one of the former owners, Ygnacio Manjarrez, deposed as follows (ibid., p. 417):
> "That he has been acquainted with the mineral district of Tayoltita for fifteen years; that in the year 1854 he and his partner, D. Juan Castillo de Valle, became the owners of the first mentioned of the mines that have been named over to him, and that during all the time that said mines were worked by them they produced good profits up to the year 1865; that they sold the mines and haciendas to an American company called the 'Abra.'"
> Francisco Torres, one of three witnesses brought up from Mexico by the Mexican Government, testified before the subcommittee on January 24, 1889, that he worked as a refiner for Castillo del Valle about a year before the sale of his mines to the company. On his direct examination Torres testified that the Rosario mine was full of water while he was working for del Valle—more than a year before the sale—and that all the others were in a bad condition, except La Luz, which was in operation (ibid., p. 505); also that the result of his "beneficiating" was "very good," but that he could not tell what was the quantity of ore out of which this result was obtained (ibid., p. 506). On his cross-examination he testified that when he was working for del Valle "he saw ore proceeding from different mines to be beneficiated in some other part of the hacienda" (ibid., p. 521), and that "he thought that most of the material on which he worked came from Rosario" (ibid., p. 524).
> He also testified that the bricks of silver refined by him weighed from 6 to 10 pounds each; that sometimes a brick was the result of one day's work and sometimes two days' work, but that he did not refine every day, and that sometimes there were intervals of three or four weeks; he came and went between his home and del Valle's hacienda, but was more in the hacienda than at home (ibid., p. 522-524). This same witness testified that La Abra mine had been "worked for the last four or five years by Don Ignacio Manjarrez, who had put in $50,000 or $60,000, and lost all without taking out any metal at all." But it appeared subsequently that the question of profit or loss was still open—that Manjarrez was tunneling La Abra mine upon an extensive plan and was not extracting ore (ibid., p. 514).

This man Manjarrez, as proven by the testimony, was an experienced miner, a man seventy years old, who had lived all his life in that part of Mexico. This witness was asked "when he was last in La Abra mine." He said:

> Last month; the time he left there.
> Q. Ask him to describe the tunnel that he has testified was in progress of construction in that mine.—A. They are making a tunnel in the direction from west to east, following the vein. There are already made about 200 meters. He explains that the tunnel runs about 200 meters in that direction, and there are branches to the left and to the right of about the same length.

This happened after the mine was abandoned by the Americans. This man Manjarrez had gone there, and so fully was he satisfied that there was wealth in those mines that he commenced running a tunnel and had expended upon it from fifty to sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. DOLPH. The mines have been several times denounced by other parties and after trial abandoned because they would not pay for working.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator wants to be a witness in the case I will cross-examine him. I am reading the testimony of witnesses produced by the Mexican Government. The La Abra Company did not bring them there, but they were brought there by the Mexican Government itself.

Another witness produced by the Mexican Government and examined at the same time, Ramon Hermosillo, testified that he knew Manjarrez and thought him a man of great experience.

Now, as to the condition of that mine under De Lagnel, Bartholow was the first superintendent. He stayed there about a year, and resigned on account of ill health. De Lagnel was the next superintendent. He stayed there about a year, and quit on account of bad health and went back to New York. This was his statement made to the directors in New York in regard to the condition of those mines at that time.

It is said here in the majority report, and will be repeated, of course, in the debate, that the mines were abandoned because the ores were worthless, not because the company was driven out of Mexico by the officials and by the people, but because the mines themselves were absolutely worthless, and, therefore, the company was unwilling to put up any more money to run them. Senator DOLPH, who examined this witness, asked:

> Q. What did you tell him you thought about it; did you give him your individual opinion?

This is a question to De Lagnel in regard to what happened in New York when he returned.

> A. No, sir; I didn't, except that he knew exactly the disadvantages I labored under. I told him then that the need was for persons who were thoroughly equipped and scientifically able to manage the business of the mines and scientifically familiar with the ores as they left the mines, to understand their position; that wealth might be in the mines, I believed. I did not attempt to touch that Lu Luz ore, but it was the Cristo ore that I was speaking of, which yielded more readily, and I thought there was more gold and silver in it; the yield, according to the assayer's estimate and the result in bulk, being so inconsiderable, much less than I had hoped, because in that large pile of ore that was thrown out as second grade, the pile that remained after the cleaning being of little value, there were ores that may have contained silver, and I didn't know but they did; I did not trust reports of the last—they were combinations with other ores that required roasting, which required furnace treatment in order to release them. I knew that much, and therefore I knew that when they melted with those ores and run them through the mill, they would meet with waste probably from quicksilver as well, and that the result would be disastrous to the company. Therefore I told him that he should be on the ground as soon as possible and have a competent man to deal with these things; that the mere running of the mill could be done by any workman who understood the machinery, the belts and pulleys, and the relation of one to the other; but it required altogether a different knowledge to deal with ores in extracting silver. Moreover, I recollect telling Mr. Collins—

He was the president of the company—that in the La Abra mine, which had not been worked at all, you may say—

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You mean by this company?
A. By this company.
Mr. FOSTER. He is speaking of the whole.
Mr. SHELLABARGER. Yes.
The WITNESS. I am speaking of the La Abra mine as a unit. I am not talking about the other mines now. I am speaking of the old Spanish mine as contradistinguished from the newer mines. I had been constantly spoken to about and knew of the difficulties in the old mine which had been rated so rich, the great depth to which it had been worked, and the difficulty of bringing out ore several hundred feet on the backs of young boys or men.

Mr. De Lagnel testified that he was not a miner. He stated that he was not a chemist, and said that after he was employed as superintendent by the company in New York, he spent six weeks in trying to learn something about the extraction of ores, but his knowledge was exceedingly limited and imperfect. He states here and so wrote—and the letter press-book shows it—to Mr. Garth not to become discouraged in regard to the mine; that there was rich ore there, that the company could still make money, but that they must hold on and send more money and make more developments in order to secure anything on the investment. This was after De Lagnel had been at the mines for one year. Here is his testimony in another place:

By Mr. DOLPH:

Q. Were you working together when the assay was made?—A. Yes, sir.

That was the assay of some mineral that was taken down to San Dimas, or to another little Mexican town there, the name of which I have forgotten—right at the scales and the furnace together. I may have weighed and he may have weighed, and I would go to the furnace and he would go to the furnace.

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. Did you do it according to the process you learned in New York?
A. Exactly.
Q. You say the results were satisfactory?

That was the quartz which existed in large quantities in the patio or square between the mill and the hacienda.

A. I can not even recollect now the men that examined it; but I recollect the result was satisfactory. I do not mean to say it gave $1,300, or anything like that, but it was satisfactory in a general sense. I was not led myself to regard it as unsatisfactory, as showing danger ahead. I do not mean to say I ever saw any $1,300 ore, because that would arrest attention. Whatever the facts were, Mr. Garth had them.
Q. The results were encouraging?
A. Perfectly satisfactory.
Q. Now, you went down there for the purpose of making that test by an assay, and you had had Mr. Hardy to take out ore that would show fair results. Is that what you asked for?
A. I asked him to have some of that ore bruised for me.

And yet we are told here in the report of the committee that this ore was entirely worthless and that the company abandoned these mines because there could be no results at all obtained from the investment that they had made. There is other testimony of De Lagnel to the same effect. Here is an extract from his letter, written just before he left the mines, to Mr. Garth, the treasurer of the company. He says:

"The only obstacle to our being actively engaged with the mill lies in the unfinished condition of the ditch."
Now I want to ask, is that right? Is that all that lacked of going right to work?
The WITNESS. What is the date?
Q. November 17, 1866.
A. If I said that then I believe it so, and stand by it now. I can tell you nothing more than that."

Now said Mr. Wilson:

Now I go on:
"I have, therefore, asked for it from the only source to which I can look for assistance."

That is, for money.

"Do not let the delay and cost already experienced cause you or others to lose heart."
Now, was that exhortation not to lose heart sincere?
A. Yes, sir.

He then goes on to testify that he never pretended to say to these gentlemen that these ores were worthless, that there was nothing to be obtained from these mines, but, on the contrary, he stated to them in his letters, and he stated in his testimony before the subcommittee, that he believed there would have been found great wealth in the mines if they could have been properly worked and if the parties owning them had not been molested.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to the other branch of this case, which involves the treatment of this company by the authorities of Mexico, it is impossible to read all the testimony, but I will commence my statement in regard to it by saying that De Lagnel himself, the witness who is accepted as entirely credible by both parties in this discussion, gives an account of a serious difficulty between him and the Mexicans working at that mine, which was instigated by the judge of the district, one Guadalupe Soto. De Lagnel testifies that Soto was a dangerous man, that he would meet him in the most affable and courteous manner, and then would incite the workmen to either stop work or make unreasonable demands of the superintendent.

De Lagnel testifies that this man Soto owned a wine shop at which the miners would drink and gamble, and in order to increase their wages and to increase the number of employés at the mines, which, of course, would increase his profits in his wine house, he incited them to demand more money and a less proportion of goods in payment of their weekly wages. More than that, he demanded officially of the superintendent of the mines that he should employ all the people who were unemployed in that district. Soto knew that the more miners employed there the larger would be his profits, and in the true Mexican fashion he used his office for the purpose of putting money into his own pocket, and he achieved two objects by it. He made money for himself and at the same time satisfied his prejudice against these "Gringoes," as the Mexicans call all Americans.

The testimony of Mora, who was a magistrate there, was that Perez, another magistrate, and Olivera, who succeeded Mora, had all agreed that this company should be run out of the country. They were opposed to the proclamation of the Mexican Government under Juarez inviting foreigners to come there and invest capital. These very Mexican officials themselves testified that they were opposed to Americans coming there, and they called them "locos," the Mexican word for fools. They said, "We intend that these locos who have brought their money here shall not take any of it away."

Mr. President, it is a most significant fact that this very man Soto, who himself denounced this property after it was abandoned by the Americans, went into possession of it with his family, and was living at the hacienda at the last accounts we had of it. Jesus Chavarria, a lawyer of Durango—and there are certificates of the highest officials that he is a man of high character and stands at the head of his profession—swears that this man Mora proposed to him that they should drive off the company, denounce the mines, and that Chavarria should have an interest in them; and Mexican lawyers, at the trial of this case before the commission, denounced Chavarria as an apostate, a renegade, and a traitor to his country, and said he was the feed counsel of the La Abra Company; that he had been employed by Exall, the last superintendent, for what purpose? As Chavarria swears and as Exall swears, it was to obtain protection for the property of the La Abra Company against illegal assessments and seizure.

Is that false? If it is false, why does not the Mexican Government bring the officials to whom Chavarria applied for redress and disprove the statement? All through this whole case the question arises why does not Mexico bring the men who are named here as having been connected with certain transactions to disprove these statements? Gen. Bartholow swore that he applied for protection to Gen. Corona and to another Mexican general, gave his name, and said he knew them both. They were both living and are living to-day for all I know. Why were they not brought and these statements of Bartholow disproved—a dead man who can not answer for himself?

Mr. President, I know that these details of an old and almost antediluvian claim are not interesting to Senators who have not examined it; but let me make one statement. I referred to Bartholow's death. Now, look at the condition of this matter to-day. Here is this great Government of Mexico, which comes here, asks that this whole matter shall be retried, and the bill so provides. What condition does it find these claimants in? Here is the death roll in this case. I will read it:

Among those of the utmost importance to the company who have died are George C. Bissel, a superintendent of mines adjoining La Abra mines; John P. Cryder, a lawyer and miner residing in Mexico; Francis F. Dana, for twenty years a resident of Mexico, and a lieutenant-colonel in the Mexican army in the war of the French invasion; A. W. Adams, the agent of the company in the taking of the testimony of its witnesses; George C. Collins, the president of the company during the period when the claim arose; Thomas J. Bartholow, the first, and Charles H. Exall, the last, superintendent of the company, and the alleged author of the alleged letters constituting the alleged newly-discovered evidence of Mexico. Much, and the most important part, of the evidence of these witnesses can not now be supplied, and especially that of the said superintendents. Their testimony as to the newly-discovered evidence, to wit, the letters alleged to be theirs, would be indispensable. Those witnesses just enumerated, who are dead, are the only witnesses who could possibly know anything about the truth or falsity of the newly-discovered evidence upon which, mainly, Mexico has based her demand for a new trial

Gen. Bartholow, who is branded here as having committed perjury, stated in his testimony emphatically that he applied for protection again and again to certain Mexican generals and gave their names. They were not unknown men. They had served in the armies of the republic upon the Liberal side. They were the chosen chieftains under Juarez when he fought the French. They occupied a high position in Mexico and were living at the time. Every facility was in the hands of Mexico to have produced them. They could have been brought here and Bartholow could have been branded as a perjured scoundrel before the world and shoved into a dishonored grave.

When I came to the Senate, thirteen years ago, Bartholow was here in the city ready to meet any man. He was a man of character, of integrity, and of courage. He was a brigadier-general in the Federal Army, and with all the excited feeling and all the irritation that came out of that unfortunate strife I undertake to say here now, and my colleague will corroborate it, of all the men engaged in warfare in the State of Missouri, Gen. Thomas J. Bartholow almost alone came out with the respect of both parties. If there ever was one stigma upon his character I never heard of it, and I will undertake to say nobody else ever did until he was branded as a perjurer in this case. And yet there was the opportunity to have shown when he was living that he swore to a lie, for he named the men to whom he had gone; he named the place; he named the date.

The Mexican Government satisfies itself with charges of wholesale perjury, against thirty Mexican witnesses who testified before that commission, all of whom were perjurers, according to the statement of Mexican lawyers, and no attempt was ever made to prosecute one of them.

But I come now to the question of the treatment of Exall on the part of the Mexican officials. It was stated by this man Exall, who was the last superintendent of the mine, had been arrested and imprisoned by one of these Mexican judges. Now I proceed to read from the testimony of the witnesses produced by Mexico itself, and I will not read from any on the other side:

Refugio Fonseca, examined on behalf of the Mexican Government by Judge Quiroz, at San Dimas, July 22, 1872 (ibid., p. 434), testified that Exall, superintendent of the company's mines, was arrested and imprisoned for three days by Judge Nicanor Perez, and that he did not know whether the said Exall had made any application to the authorities of the State.

N. A. Sloan, whose deposition was taken before Judge Quiroz at San Dimas, in behalf of the Mexican Government, on the 9th of October, 1871, testified (ibid., p. 426):

"That the superintendent had been imprisoned without knowing for what; he said that he knew he had been a prisoner in the jail, and that he understood that his imprisonment was because, or, rather, according to what he saw of the affair, it was because the judge went into the hacienda to speak to one of the peons who was at work there, and the superintendent thereupon put him out, from which it resulted that the said judge immediately went to his house and ordered the superintendent to be called before him, when he sent him to prison."

The aforesaid James Granger—

Who afterwards married a daughter of this man Soto, and who seems to have been a clerk for Exall, the last superintendent, an Englishman.

The aforesaid James Granger, in the third of his depositions for the Mexican Government, testified to the arrest and imprisonment of the superintendent as follows (ibid., pp. 434, 435):

"Being asked what he knew about the imprisonment of the superintendent of the mining establishment of Tayoltita, what was his name, how long he was imprisoned, by what judge, and what was the result of the application which the latter made to the authorities of the State, he replied that he was a witness to the arrest, and that his name was Charles H. Exall; that he was imprisoned for two or three days because he reproved Judge Nicanor Perez for having removed from one room to another in the establishment of the company, and he knew that the superintendent had complained to the governor of Durango, but that he does not know with what result."

I will ask the Secretary to read further from this document.

The Secretary read as follows:

It will be interesting and suggestive to compare the accounts of Exall's arrest and imprisonment given by Granger in his depositions on behalf of the Mexican Government with his account of the same occurrence in his earlier depositions on behalf of the company; but before quoting from these, it may be proper to quote what is said on this subject in the majority report of the committee (p. 12):

"One of the specific acts alleged to establish the charge of hostility on the part of the Mexican authorities is the imprisonment of the superintendent, Exall. In his deposition before the commission Exall states that he was arrested by the local judge; that without any form of trial or knowledge of his offense he was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, fined $50, and thrust into prison.

"In a letter which Exall wrote to the prefect at San Dimas, the official superior of the local judge, a copy of which is found in the letter-book, all the details as to the causes of the arrest are set forth. His own account as there given contradicts his deposition, and shows that his detention must have been of a trivial character. The evidence does not show that he was actually imprisoned. It was an arrest under which he was detained for an hour or so, and was not of sufficient consequence to be mentioned in his correspondence with the New York office, and does not appear to have interfered with his duties as superintendent."

An examination of Exall's letter to the prefect at San Dimas, written from Tayoltita, January 7, 1868 (about two months before the abandonment of the mines), shows that Exall was still under arrest when he made this appeal for protection. The letter was written on the same day that the arrest was made. In this letter, after detailing the circumstances minutely, Exall says:

"I asked if he intended putting me in jail please to do so, as I had a headache and wished to lie down. He then gave me permission to go to the hacienda, but to consider myself still his prisoner, and (to be) at his house whenever ordered. * * * But for being a prisoner I would come and see you in reference to the matter, but unfortunately necessity compels me to write." (Appendix, pp. 316, 317.)

It is evident that this letter was not intended to describe, and could not possibly have described, the duration of the imprisonment. The letter was an appeal for release from illegal detention then existing, and which had already lasted more than "an hour or so." Exall was evidently anxious, and with good reason, to find out how much longer he was likely to be kept in duress. When the isolation of that mining district is considered, and the inflammable character of the population, the circumstances attending the superintendent's arrest are worthy of the careful attention of Senators who may have to act in this case. The deed was evidently done to humiliate the superintendent publicly and to magnify the local magistrate's power. This appears from the following passage of Exall's letter, referring to the judge who had made the arrest:

"He had collected around his house a number of men, and in the house preparations had been made as if resistance was expected and force might be required. * * * I asked him if he had gotten through with me, as I desired to return to the hacienda. He replied, yes, he had finished. Mr. Sloane and I then left and bid him good-bye. As we reached the corridor he said he never wanted to see me in his house except on official business. To this I replied, 'Very well, sir,' and turned to leave. He called me back, saying not to go; if I did he would send a force after me, and they would shoot, and insisted on my returning to the house. I did so, without any remark. He then said I was his prisoner. I then requested to know what was to be done. He said he would put me in jail until he could receive instructions from San Dimas. I remained passive, and he then gave full license to his tongue, abusing me in the most violent language." (Appendix, p. 316.)

The effect of such an exhibition of arbitary power as this among such a population can readily be imagined. What happened afterwards appears from the testimony, and the first thing to be noted is that the prefect did not interfere on Exall's behalf. Just how long he was imprisoned seems to be a matter of some doubt. The Mexican commissioner, Zamacona, in his opinion upon La Abra claim, says that "it is proved by the statements of four unimpeachable witnesses" that Superintendent Exall's imprisonment "only lasted four days." (Ex. Doc. No. 103, H. R., Forty-eighth Congress, first session, p. 40.)

What happened after his fruitless appeal to the prefect is thus related by James Granger in his deposition for the company, made at Mazatlan before the United States commercial agent May 14, 1870 (Appendix, p. 354):

"In the month of December, 1867, or January, 1868, the superintendent, Charles H. Exall, was arrested and imprisoned by the 'juez conciliador' of Tayoltita, Nicanor Perez, on a mere pretext, without any reasonable cause whatever. The particulars are as follows: Mr. Exall was occupied in a private room, and in private conversation, and while so engaged, said juez, or judge, Perez entered the store at the hacienda, and without speaking or asking permission, he passed into a private storeroom adjoining, and Mr. Exall observing this, stepped to the door of said storeroom, and in a polite manner addressed said Perez, saying that no one was allowed to enter said storerooms without license, and if he had any business to please communicate the same to him. Said Perez came out of said storeroom in a great rage, and asked Mr. Exall if he thought he, Perez, was a thief, or wanted to steal anything. Mr. Exall denied any such idea, and stated that, in requesting him to leave the private storeroom he was merely carrying out the general rules of the company.

"Said Perez would listen to no explanations, and when he went out remarked that he, Exall, should hear from him. About half an hour after an order came to the hacienda for Mr. Exall to attend forthwith before the said juez or judge, Perez, which order Mr. Exall obeyed, and upon entering said court room said Judge Perez commenced a tirade of the most infamous personal abuse of said Exall, without allowing explanation or justification, sentenced said Exall to pay a fine of, I think, about $50, and imprisonment for two months.

"Exall was confined in the hacienda until the next morning, when he was sent for by said "juez," who did lock up said Exall in an old empty house, with the declared intention of sending him to San Dimas to complete his sentence. Said judge remarked at the same time that he could not permit Exall to ride even his own mule to San Dimas; that he should treat him the same as he would treat any common prisoner.

"When I went to visit said Exall in his prison the next morning I found him busily engaged in killing fleas that were troubling him. It was a filthy place. By personal influences I brought to bear and by securing the payment of the fine imposed upon him I managed to get Mr. Exall released. All of the above I witnessed myself.

"A few weeks after this occurrence, on a Saturday, the superintendent, Exall, received from said Judge Perez an order directing him to attend at his 'juez-gado' (court room), and the same evening, at seven (7) o'clock, Mr. Exall, in obedience to said order, went to the court room, where he found assembled a large number of the employés of La Abra Company's mines and others, and in their presence the said judge proceeded to lecture said Exall upon the manner in which the business of said company should be carried on, and he threatened that if the superintendent or company did not work in the mode and manner to please the authorities they should be deprived of their property and forced to flee the country; all of which was said in my hearing, and although I have only stated a few circumstances that came under my direct observation, showing the animus of the authorities and people of this district, these are not by any means to be taken as all that took place, nor even as the most vexatious. It was the daily and almost hourly annoyances and interruptions. Every pretext that could by any means be made the basis of a suit or exaction was availed of."

Exall's own account of his arrest and imprisonment, as given in his deposition on behalf of the company, before Mr. Justice Barnard of the supreme court of New York, December 2, 1869, is as follows (ibid., p. 337):

"The civil officers of the legitimate Government of Mexico under President Juarez also harassed and annoyed us, and interfered with the continuing of the mining operations of said company. I was arrested by the order of the local magistrate or judge of Tayoltita, whose official title, as I understood, was "juez," and thrust into prison and sentenced by him to a fine of $50, and imprisonment for two months. I had no trial, nor even an examination, except by him personally, and do not know for what I was arrested or imprisoned; but I here state positively that I had not committed any act, crime, or offense against the laws or people of Mexico, or any citizen or soldier of the same, nor against any of the authorities, local or national.

"I was released through the personal influence of a Mr. Granger, who had to promise payment of the said fine; no good reason ever having been given me for my arrest or release. I had frequently applied to the proper military and civil authorities of Mexico, both in Sinaloa and Durango, for redress and protection against the violence stated, but was rudely denied by both in every case, and could get neither; and these threatened acts, and the acts of violence, were encouraged and connived at by said authorities, if not actually instigated by them, which last I believe to be the fact also. By reason of these facts it was very difficult to keep men there at work, and the prosecution of the work was greatly hindered and delayed, and it finally became utterly impossible to continue the mining operations of the company; and I was compelled, with my men, to give up the same entirely, and to abandon the mines and all the mining implements and property of the company, to save our lives."

It does not appear to the undersigned that there is any conflict whatever, as suggested in the majority report, between the letter which Exall wrote on the day he was arrested, to the prefect at San Dimas, and the foregoing account, extracted from his deposition. Nor will it be now contended by members of the committee, in view of the statement of the Mexican commissioner, Zamacona, and the testimony of Mexican witnesses, that "the evidence does not show that he (Exall) was actually imprisoned," or that the detention was "of a trivial character"—only "an hour or so"—and "not of sufficient consequence to be mentioned in his correspondence with the New York office."

If the letterpress copy book contains all his correspondence with the New York office, Exall only wrote one letter, as superintendent, after his release from confinement at Tayoltita, and that was written to Mr. Garth on the 24th of January, 1868, at Mazatlan. There may have been a reason why Exall did not allude to his imprisonment in that letter, but the reason was not the one suggested in the majority report of the committee, if an affidavit which Exall made shortly before his death (Appendix, pp. 943-945), and to which the majority report makes no allusion whatever, is to be credited. That affidavit undertakes to explain certain discrepancies between some of his later letters as superintendent and the depositions which he subsequently made in support of the company's claim before the Joint Commission. This ante mortem affidavit of his will be further considered hereafter in connection with his letters as they appear in the company's letterpress copy book.

Before leaving the subject of his arrest and imprisonment, it may be well to add an account of the affair given by another eyewitness—John P. Cryder—in a deposition on behalf of the company (ibid., pp. 374, 375):

"I was, myself, a witness to an outrage upon the superintendent of that company, Mr. Charles H. Exall, who was, to my own knowledge, improperly and unlawfully arrested and imprisoned by the local judge, or "juez," at Tayoltita. I was present when said arrest was made, and I was also present at the hacienda of said La Abra Company when the cause or excuse was given, which appeared to me like a miserable pretext for said arrest. It was this: Said Superintendent Exall was sitting in his private room at the hacienda, in consultation with some man on private business, when the said "juez" walked into an adjoining private storeroom, without knocking or being invited in, and Mr. Exall remarked to said "juez" that it was his private storeroom, and if he, the "juez," wished to see him on business, he, Exall, would go out and see him, or words to this effect.

"These remarks were made in a pleasant and gentlemanly manner, which should have given no offense to any reasonable man, but said "juez" remarked that his dignity was insulted, or something to that effect, and that he would have satisfaction, or that he, Exall, would hear from him; and about half an hour after the occurrence named I saw an armed guard come with the orders of said judge, or "juez," and arrested Superintendent Exall, and took him before the judge.

"I followed him, and I heard the said local judge, Nicanor Perez, order said Superintendent Exall to be imprisoned in the hacienda that night, with a guard over him; and said judge sent for said Exall the next morning to appear before him, which he did, in charge of a guard, and the moment he entered the court room I heard the said judge call him, Exall, very bad names, and he poured out upon him the most vile epithets in the Spanish language, abusing him in the most shameful manner; all of which Mr. Exall seemed to bear without losing his temper; and said judge, after he had exhausted the vocabulary of abusive epithets, as I thought, then turned to said Exall and announced his determination to carry out the sentence of imprisonment for two months in the common jail at San Dimas, and $50 fine, but at the same time ordered the guard to compel said Exall to go all the way to San Dimas on foot, and not to allow him even to ride his own mule, saying the judge would learn the Gringoes (as Americans are called) to treat him with deference and respect.

"He then ordered said Exall to be locked up that night in Tayoltita in an old uninhabited house that was said to have been occupied by diseased persons. It did seem to me that nothing was too bad for said judge to say and do against said Exall. The next morning I visited said Exall, in company with an Englishman, whose name was James Granger. This Mr. Granger not being an American, but an Englishman, had some influence with Judge Perez, although he was in the employ of the company, and he was permitted to call on the prisoner. He invited me to go with him, and I did so; we found Mr. Exall, a gentleman of refinement, busily engaged in the work of defending himself from the attacks of millions of fleas. The house where he was confined had a most disgusting smell, and was filthy beyond description.

"It was said by the people there that this old house had been but recently occupied by persons of loathsome diseases, and that the judge knew this fact when he sent Mr. Exall there.

"This seemed to create so much sympathy and feeling at Tayoltita in favor of Mr. Exall, even with those natives and unemployed workmen who were in favor of driving said company away from the country, that Mr. Granger managed, with some influences unknown to me, and by securing the payment of the fine, to get Mr. Exall released from this vile prison house; and I do not know what became of the case after that."

Taking all the testimony on this subject together—what was offered on behalf of the Mexican Government and what was offered by the company in the depositions from which the foregoing extracts have been made—it appears beyond question that the local judge publicly and unlawfully invaded the personal liberty of the company's superintendent and insulted and humbled him—made a spectacle of him—in the presence of the people who worked in the mines, as well as those who were dissatisfied because he did not employ them, and afterwards imprisoned him for several days in a filthy hut. He did not owe his release from this pest house to the interference of the local judge's superior, to whom he had appealed in writing, but to the efforts of one of his own subordinates, a British subject, whose relations to the "juez conciliador" of Tayoltita, Gaudalupe Soto, appear in the testimony.

It will also have been noticed that the same magistrate, Perez, as stated in the foregoing extract from Granger's deposition, made another exhibition of his hostility "a few weeks afterwards" (which would be in February, 1868), and threatened "in presence of a large number of the employés of La Abra Company's mines," that the company "should be deprived of their property and forced to flee the country, if the superintendent or company did not work in the mode and manner to please the authorities."

Mr. VEST. The Secretary may suspend there. I have had that testimony read because it shows, if it shows nothing else, that this Mexican officer acted beyond any sort of legitimate authority which was vested in him, and whether that imprisonment lasted for five months or for five days, it shows the animus on the part of the authorities towards Americans and towards this company.

I understand that this proceeding is instituted in order to vindicate the honor of the American Government, to use the language of the Supreme Court, that this Government's name shall not be the cover for gross fraud on the part of any of its citizens towards a friendly power. I will go as far as any Senator here to vindicate the honor of this Government if it has been violated or sacrificed in any way.

But there is another side to this question, and that is that Mexico ought to have made her citizens treat the citizens of the United States as their own people were treated, and, if possible, that they should have been treated with more fairness even, and given more protection. That this man was imprisoned is beyond any sort of doubt, and he was imprisoned for nothing. If the meanest and most petty official in this country had done such a thing to a Mexican citizen he would have been punished for it by our authorities to the full extent of the law.

I asserted here—and the Senator from Oregon says he is willing to accept the issue at once—that De Lagnel said that there was a general feeling of hostility toward Americans on the part of Mexicans, not confined to the lower orders but also shared by officials, and every man who has been in Mexico knows that to be the truth. Ever since the Mexican war, as we term it, the Mexican people—the lower classes among them—have had the deepest-seated hostility to the "Gringos," as they are called, the American locos or fools, in the Mexican and Spanish patois. It exists there to-day and will always exist. I made the assertion in regard to De Lagnel upon the issue which the Senator from Oregon so promptly accepted, and I will turn to his testimony now, and I want Senators to hear it. De Lagnel is admitted here to be a perfectly disinterested and honest witness, brought here by the Mexican Government, and taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Here is his statement. He says:

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. Well, there was hostility to Americans there?

A. That existed at that time, and I just mentioned just what I know. My own clerk, a young man who was employed in the store, a Mexican born, and raised in San Ignacio, 70 miles from the mines—he had been educated in California, and spoke English as well as I could, in talking with him one evening, discussing this very thing—

That is, the question of hostility—

he just scouted the idea of the withdrawal of the French being due to the United States Government, and I tried to show him that without the United States Mexico would never have got rid of the French; but he scouted it, and speaking of what the Mexicans were capable of, and so went on to speak as if they were able to take care of themselves——

Mr. MORGAN. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. VEST. I am reading from De Lagnel's testimony.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the subcommittee?

Mr. VEST. Yes—

they were able to take care of themselves with any people or peoples. I said, speaking to him: "You ought not give heed to these reports"—something of the sort—"because the Americans are friendly to you."

That was the report that Gen. Butler was going there with an army to seize the State of Durango.

"They—

The Americans—

"certainly have shown it in this late action of the Government in assisting in ridding you of this foreign control, and you ought to feel kindly towards them." He said: "We hate them." I said—he was only a boy—"How can you?" I said: "I was here in 1847, in the City of Mexico, and you were born about the close of the war. You are a boy now; how can you have that feeling?" "I have no feeling one way or another towards you except—because," he said, "it was taught us by our fathers. They have told us all, and they keep at it."

Q. Well, there was hostility and prejudice in their minds against the Americans?

A. I judge from these conversations that that settlement was hostile, but restrained from self-interest, and as long as capital was being placed there and workmen paid it would be well. These men, under an honest employer, who exacted nothing unfair and treated them kindly, would have gone on in their work without interruption, but at the same time this state of feeling existed in the country, and it required very little effort on the part of an evil-disposed person to inflame their tempers and minds and make them hostile, and when they became so they would resort to desperate measures.

Mr. MORGAN. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. VEST. I read from De Lagnel's testimony, on page 95.

Mr. MORGAN. That is not the record.

Mr. VEST. I read from the minority report.

Mr. MORGAN. That minority report does not state the testimony correctly, as I will show when I get the floor.

Mr. VEST. I will take the original testimony, then.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator had better do that.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator deny that this is De Lagnel's testimony?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. VEST. I will show it.

[At this point the honorable Senator yielded the floor that the Senate might proceed to the consideration of executive business.]

Mr. DOLPH. I hope we may have an executive session. I think Senators are in the committee rooms and in the cloakrooms in sufficient numbers to make a quorum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will yield to that, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 19, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 18, 1892.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 18, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the States and the Territories be called for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions under the rule heretofore adopted during this session.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and paid from the indefinite appropriations provided by the act of August 30, 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

SOLDIERS' HOMES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Board of Managers, transmitting the report of the Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the year ending June 30, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The documents accompanying this report, being very voluminous, will not be ordered to be printed; but if their printing should be desired by the committee or ordered by the House it can be done hereafter.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a statement of the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway, showing the receipts and disbursements for the year ending December 31, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXPENDITURES FROM CONTINGENT APPROPRIATION FOR NAVY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a detailed statement of the expenditures from the contingent appropriation for the Navy Department, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill of June 11, 1890, for the year ending June 30, 1891; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read twice, and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 440) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brulé County and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce;

A bill (S. 430) making appropriation for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records—to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 1374) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I submitted a resolution asking the Committee on Manufactures to make certain investigations, which resolution was referred by the Speaker to to the Committee on Rules. A bill has been introduced into the Senate which covers practically the same ground, and which will be referred in that body to the committee which corresponds to the House Committee on Manufactures. I would therefore ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken from the Committee on Rules and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if the gentleman would repeat his statement.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution which I introduced was to direct the Committee on Manufactures to investigate what is called the "sweating system" of tenement labor and to report, if possible, some legislative plan to mitigate the evil.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Committee on Rules was discharged from its consideration, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its secretaries, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 123) fixing the times for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa.

EXPENDITURES WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

Mr. REILLY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives what amount of money has been appropriated and is available under the act of April 25, 1890, relating to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago; and also what amount of the money so appropriated has been expended, with an itemized statement showing to whom paid, for what purpose, and upon what account.

On motion of Mr. REILLY, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, upon the 11th instant my colleague [Mr. BOWMAN] introduced some bills for me. Among them are two bills for clerks for members. One of those bills provided for the payment of the clerks out of the contingent fund and was properly referred to the Committee on Accounts. The other of the bills has no relation to the contingent fund, but that was also referred to the Committee on Accounts. It should, I think, have been referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and I ask that it may be so referred. It is the bill (H. R. 2668) to authorize the appointment and prescribe the compensation of clerks to Representatives and Delegates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated by him (H. R. 2668), providing for clerks for members, be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws instead of to the Committee on Accounts. Is there objection to the request?

There was no ojection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the correction of a reference. Two bills which I introduced should have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions instead of to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the titles of the two bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1826) granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Byers.
A bill (H. R. 1827) granting an increase of pension to John S. Walker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. These two bills will be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS, WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a resolution for present consideration, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBOROW] asks for the present consideration of a resolution the title of which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Columbian Exposition be, and is hereby, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary, in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition during the term of the Fifty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OATES. That resolution is broad enough, so that they could print a wagon-load of books. I object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] objects to the present consideration of the resolution. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to have the resolution referred?

Mr. DURBOROW. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on the World's Columbian Exposition.

CLERK'S DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to vacate the room now occupied as the Clerk's document room at the south side of the central passage of the basement story of the House wing of the Capitol, opposite the large restaurant room, and to move the books, shelves, and furniture therefrom into room No. 17 of the terrace, House side, and to fit up this room for the purpose of the Clerk's document room; and that the Architect of the Capitol be directed to fit up the room thus vacated, and to construct a lift in it communicating with the cellar story for the use of the restaurant; and that all necessary expense incurred in making these changes and removals be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, under the direction of the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that resolution should go to the Committee on Accounts, and I object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

USE OF PUBLIC MONEY FOR RELIGIOUS PURPOSES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to present a memorial which, under the rule, would go into the petition box. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD. It only covers one page of writing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the memorial, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Petition of the National League for the Protection of American Institutions, praying for the passage of a constitutional amendment forbidding the use of public money or credit for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the memorial be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to find out what it is about.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a memorial of the National Association upon this subject.

Mr. REED. Upon what subject?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Clerk will read the title again.

The Clerk again reported the title of the memorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine object?

Mr. REED. Not in the least. I had not any idea what it was about, and simply wanted to know.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have before objected to the printing of long memorials and I shall continue to object to their being spread upon the RECORD. I object to this.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can I ask to have the memorial referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the resolution and memorial will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The roll of the States was then called, when bills of the following titles were introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and referred to the several committees named below.

TO REPEAL SECTION 3700, REVISED STATUTES.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 3961) to repeal section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds or notes for the purchase of coin—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

DESIGNATION OF BANKS TO ACT AS UNITED STATES DEPOSITORIES.

By Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR: A bill (H. R. 3962) providing for the designation of banks to act as depositories of money of the United States—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PUBLIC BUILDING, IRONTON, OHIO.

By Mr. ENOCHS: A bill (H. R. 3963) to provide for the construction of a public building at Ironton, Ohio—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

INCREASE OF REVENUES AND CIRCULATING MEDIUM.

By Mr. HARTER: A bill (H. R. 3964) to increase the revenues and to supply additional circulating mediums.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have that bill read.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to have the bill read. There is no rule which prohibits it.

The bill was read as follows:

SECTION 1. That all laws providing for the taxation of the circulating notes of State banks duly authorized by State authority to issue and circulate the same be, and hereby are, repealed.

SEC. 2. That on and after the passage of this bill all circulating notes authorized and issued by any bank under the authority of any State shall pay the same rate of annual tax as is paid upon the circulating notes of national banks, said tax to be collected semiannually by the internal-revenue collectors of the United States from the banks issuing the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that inasmuch as this bill pertains to the circulation and also to the repeal of taxes, it might properly go either to the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Committee on Ways and Means. To which committee does the gentleman desire to have it referred?

Mr. HARTER. To the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether under the rule that bill ought not to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks, as he has already stated, that it might properly be referred to either the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Committee on Ways and Means; but inasmuch as the bill proposes to repeal a tax now in force upon banks other than national banks the Chair is inclined to the opinion that it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. OATES. I understand that the bill proposes to repeal a tax upon State bank notes and circulation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. OATES. Then I think it should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it might properly go to either committee.

Mr. OATES. It does not propose to repeal the tax now imposed upon national-bank circulation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not. It proposes to repeal the 10 per cent tax.

Mr. OATES. Then I think it ought to go to Banking and Currency.

Mr. REED. Clearly not, under all former rulings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of reference is, of course, for the House to determine.

Mr. OATES. If the bill is in line with other bills on the same subject which have been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, I think the same committee ought to take charge of it, so as to avoid confusion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. OATES. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I desire to say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that similar bills to this have been introduced during this session and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and in former Congresses also like bills were referred to that committee. This bill provides for taxes and nothing else, and it seems to me that the Committee on Ways and Means is the proper committee to which to refer it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the gentleman from Tennessee. Such bills have been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency heretofore, and similar bills introduced at this session have been referred to that committee. The tax, while nominally a tax for revenue, is really a tax for the prohibition of the State banks. No revenue has ever been received from it, and it has always been treated as a part of the national-bank system.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. OATES to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, it was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS.

By Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR: A joint resolution (H. Res. 60) proposing an amendment to the Constitution, substituting the 30th day of April for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of members of the House of Representatives and United States Senators, and substituting the 30th of April for the 4th of March as the date for the commencement and limitation of the term of the President and Vice-President.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask that this joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read at length, and referred to the Select Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the special order for to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] calls up the special order for to-day. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3513) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The Clerk then began the reading of the bill, pending which

Mr. RICHARDSON said: Mr. Speaker, the special order under which this bill is to be considered provides that it shall be read by sections, and as each section is read it will be open for amendment and debate. I imagine, therefore, it will not be necessary to consume the time of the House in a general reading of the entire bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now taken up by sections, and that the further reading of it as a whole be dispensed with.

Mr. HEARD. I do not want to appear captious, but I hope the gentleman will permit it to be read continuously and as a whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is to be read for consideration by sections afterward.

Mr. HEARD. I understand that it will be read by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OATES in the chair). The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HEARD. Let me understand the gentleman from Tennessee. As I understand, this is the last opportunity we will have for hearing it read connectedly. It will hereafter be read by sections only.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is true.

Mr. HEARD. I insist upon its being read as a whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will keep the members here to hear the reading of it.

Mr. HEARD. I should be very glad to. I will keep one member here.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, pending which,

Mr. RICHARDSON said: I ask the indulgence of the House to make one other statement at this point. The joint committee submitting this bill have accompanied it with a report, which has been adopted by the committee of the House also as the report of that committee. It is Senate Report No. 18. I mention this in order that members who feel an interest in the subject may send to the document room and procure copies of the report. I will call attention to the fact that the bill is printed in this report, and that each section of the bill is annotated; that there is a note at the bottom which explains the particular change made in each section thereof. The bill, with the annotated sections, begins on page 428 of the report.

The clerk continued the reading of the bill. He having read as follows:

SEC. 22. Whenever any machinery or material in the Government Printing Office shall have been regularly condemned as unserviceable, the Public Printer may sell the same, after public advertisement, to the highest bidder, for cash, and turn the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That in case the sum or sums offered for such advertised property should be deemed by him too low, he may exchange said old machinery or material for new, paying the difference in money, and render appropriate vouchers for such expenditure.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri said: Mr. Speaker, I ask the chairman of the committee to explain the meaning of that proviso. Why not let that section be considered to end at line 5?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the bill is now being read formally the first time, and that there will be opportunity for debating each section hereafter.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill. When section 34 was read,

Mr. HEARD said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the extreme length of this bill, and the fact that the Clerk has already read more than thirty sections of it, and as we are told by the chairman in charge of the bill that there will be ample opportunity for full discussion, I rise to withdraw my objection to the suspension of the first formal reading of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I renew my request to dispense with the further formal reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further formal reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. It is a very important bill and I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

When section 40 had been read

Mr. POWERS said: Mr. Speaker, with a view of postponing the further reading of this bill, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] whether there are sufficient copies of this report so that each member may have one before him?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS. It is very evident, Mr. Speaker, that this is an important bill, and a proper understanding of it can not be had by this very hurried reading of it in the presence of the House. I would move, therefore——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that there are sufficient copies in the hands of the superintendent of the document room to supply each member, and all that a member will have to do will be to send there and get one for himself.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And then read 470 pages in half an hour. That is all we will have.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of enabling members to thoroughly understand the bill by procuring copies of the report, I move that further consideration of this subject be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope that motion will not prevail, because, I will state to the gentleman, after the bill is read as a whole I propose to discuss it generally; and after it has been further discussed generally by any other gentlemen on the floor who so desire, each item of the bill will be read separately, and as it is so read it will be open for further discussion and for any amendment that any gentleman proposes to make. I do not, therefore, see why we should delay the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order will be that general debate (which the Chair has no power to limit, but which is with the House) shall proceed after the reading of the bill has been completed or dispensed with. The bill will then be read by sections for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that debate is not in order, and that nothing can be done but to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to debate the bill; I did not rise for that purpose, but arose for the purpose of obtaining light, and to suggest that by having this report laid upon our desks we should have the bill before us in such a way that we could understand and act upon it. I trust the gentleman from Tennessee will see the propriety of adopting my suggestion in order that the House may get light on the subject.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to debate the motion made by the gentleman on my right, but simply to state that I think we should go on with the reading of this bill, which is a very important bill, then hear the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, who has the bill in charge, and then agree upon such a length of time as may be proper for general debate. There should not be any action upon this bill to-day. It is too important a bill to rush through this House; but I am in favor of going on with the business here, and after the chairman of the committee has stated its object, and when other gentlemen have spoken on this bill, then take it up and consider it section by section to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to any discussion now, and insist on the completion of the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a motion or request to dispense with the reading of the bill requires unanimous consent, and that a motion to indefinitely postpone, or postpone to a subsequent date, is not in order at this time, nor until the completion of the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was then resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the bill has now been completed, and general debate is in order. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the House and the country that the consideration of the measure now pending does not in any degree involve partisan politics. We can therefore approach its consideration without that bias and prejudice which are naturally engendered by the discussion of political measures on this floor. This matter involves only questions of business. I shall in the brief period in which I shall occupy the floor at this time discuss the general scope of the bill. This bill is the result of much labor, investigation, and thought on the part of the committee presenting it. The committee was raised by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, dated February 9, 1891, and which passed on the last day of the Fifty-first Congress. The joint committee thus created was composed of the Senate Committee on Printing, Senators MANDERSON, HAWLEY, and GORMAN; with two members of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress, who were elected to the Fifty-second Congress, the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. RUSSELL, and myself.

The concurrent resolution creating the committee directed them to examine into the numbers printed of the various documents, reports, bills, and other papers published by order of Congress or of either House thereof, and of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to report a bill to the present Congress making such reductions in the numbers and cost of printing, and such changes and reduction in the distribution of said publications as they may deem expedient. The committee was also instructed to investigate the printing and binding for the Executive Departments executed at the Government Printing Office and at the branch printing offices and binderies in the various Departments, making such reductions in expenses and imposing such checks as they may deem expedient, and, further, to make any other investigations calculated in their opinion to reduce the cost of the public printing.

Mr. OWENS. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWENS. I would like to ask how members are to ascertain by this bill what changes have been made? There is nothing to indicate the changes made from the old law, and we do not know what we are acting on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to refer to these changes as I progress in my argument; and further, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to a statement which I have already made, and that is, that there is an annotated copy of this bill which gentlemen can procure in the shape of the bill I have here, and he will find at the bottom of each section in that annotated copy a reference to it, and a reference to any change in that item in the existing law.

The committee were instructed to submit a report showing the result of their labors and investigations, as I have stated, to the present Congress. This committee assembled in the city of Washington on the 13th day of April last, and proceeded to make the investigations ordered by the concurrent resolution. It will be seen from an analysis of the instructions of the committee given in the resolution that it was intended by Congress that the investigation made should be far-reaching and should cover the entire field of public printing for the Government.

This, of course, means all the printing done at the Government Printing Office for the two Houses of Congress, and all the Executive Departments and bureaus of the Government. The testimony of nearly forty witnesses was taken by the committee, most of whom are connected officially with the public printing and binding, and distribution of public documents, and who were well qualified to give evidence upon the points involved in the investigation.

The testimony of these witnesses will be found in the appendix to the report of the committee. The report submitted by the committee is full on all the questions involved. In addition to the testimony of the witnesses who were called before the committee, there is much evidence also submitted with the report, brought out in response to letters addressed to the various heads of the Departments, and questions propounded to them. The committee has given most careful attention to the testimony of all these witnesses and all the evidence which was elicited. All the sections of the Revised Statutes and of the supplements thereto, and they are very numerous, which in any manner provide for and regulate public printing have been carefully gone over by the committee and a revision made thereof. The committee entered upon its labors with one chief object, which was the reduction of the quantity of printing and the cutting down of the cost thereof to the Government. They were in full accord with the sentiments so often expressed by members of Congress and other intelligent persons that there was too much printing being done.

Their efforts and energies were all turned in the direction of economy in this branch of the public service. While they realized that there was just complaint at the large quantity of printing done, they further realized another complaint equally as serious and well founded, and that relates to the distribution of public documents and printing. When it is remembered that documents printed for the Government are distributed from many different sources, it will readily occur to anyone that the distribution could justly be complained of. For instance, documents are distributed by Senators, by Representatives, by the Executive Departments for which they are printed, and by the superintendent of documents in the Interior Department, thus making four distinct sources from which the same document might be and often is sent to the same person. Under the present system of distribution it is not possible to prevent frequent duplication of documents; it is true that the same document may be lawfully sent from each of these four sources to the same person.

It was made to appear to the committee that in one instance the same document, a most valuable one, too, was sent by forty different persons to the one man. This was a gross abuse, and calls loudly for some provision to prevent its repetition. The committee, of course, do not claim for this measure that it is perfect. The difficulties which presented themselves and the obstacles they were called upon to surmount were too great to be overcome by one measure. They hope, however, that there will be found in the bill under consideration such reforms and the institution of such methods as will eventually bring about remedies for all the evils complained of.

The committee found the laws which govern the public printing and binding and the distribution of documents in a condition which can almost with propriety be called chaotic. They have endeavored to arrange all the laws on the subject in a methodical and orderly way.

Mr. OWENS. By permission, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, as I am only asking this so as to understand the bill. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWENS. Now, if I understand the proposition in this bill, it is to take away from members of Congress the right to distribute these documents, and to put it in the hands of an Executive Department of the Government. I see no other object to be accomplished by it, and I would like to know if by section 95 it is not intended that we shall not distribute any documents as members of Congress, but turn that duty over to a Department selected by the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief answer to the gentleman now, and as I progress in what I have to say I will cover the subject more fully, and will endeavor to make still further answer as we proceed to the consideration of that item. I will say to him now that he is wholly misinformed, if he has any such idea as that to which he has just given expression. Now, I wish the gentleman would wait until I get to that section of the bill, when I will be glad to join in its discussion. But it is out of order now to enter upon a discussion of that feature in this bill. I hope the gentleman will wait until we reach the item, and then I will make a full statement on that subject.

I will now address myself somewhat in detail to the provisions of the bill. The first seventeen sections thereof relate to the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses, their powers and duties. These seventeen sections embody substantially the provisions of the present law, as found in the Revised Statutes of the United States and the supplements thereto.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman permit a question on that point?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Section 2 of the bill provides that "the Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to adopt such measures as may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing." Now, my recollection is that the present law requires that before the joint committee can make any change in the printing the sanction of Congress must first be obtained. Is that so, or not?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon my discussing the details of this bill at this time. When we come to consider it item by item I shall be glad to answer all questions as well as I can.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, I will withdraw the question for the present, but I shall expect the gentleman to explain to the House why this bill proposes to give such extensive powers to the joint committee.

Mr. HEARD. It only gives them power "to remedy any neglect or delay in the execution of the public printing," evidently referring to printing previously ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I think the bill goes much further than the present law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is some increase in the powers proposed to be given to the joint committee, because the committee thought it was wise to give them this additional power in order to prevent delay, as the gentleman will see if he will examine the note upon this point in the report.

Mr. SAYERS. I have read it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I undertake to discuss the bill in detail in this way I shall not have time to submit what I had intended to say upon the measure generally. When we come to consider it by sections I shall be pleased to answer questions and explain details.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] asked his question, these seventeen sections embody substantially the existing law on this subject. As the bill is to be read by sections, I will not undertake to refer to the slight changes and alterations made in these sections, but will do so if necessary when they are considered separately. From section 18 to 44, inclusive, will be found the duties of the Public Printer.

These sections also are nearly all taken substantially from existing laws. Where alterations are made therein they appear in the report of the joint committee with the reasons therefor. I call attention to one of the changes, however, made by section 32 of the bill. This section covers the branch printing offices and other printing establishments in the several Departments where printing has been done. There are now four branch offices, properly speaking: one each in the State, Treasury, Navy, and Interior Departments. They are all under the control of the Public Printer. In addition to these we found printing establishments in the Post-Office, War, and Agricultural Departments; one in the Weather Bureau, and one in the Surgeon-General's Office. These are not branch offices, but have been in operation for several years, and as the committee believe in violation of law, which provides—

> That all printing and binding and blank books for the Senate and House of Representatives and Executive and Judicial Departments shall be done by the Government Printing Office, except in cases otherwise provided by law.

It was thought best by the committee, after a full investigation into the matter and after visiting all of the Departments and places where printing was done, that it would be in the interest of the public service and in the line of economy to place all of these offices under the Public Printer, and to provide, further, that all offices hereafter established by law shall be placed under his direction and be under his control. It is but proper for me to say that the heads of the various Departments all state in writing that these printing offices are necessary to prompt and efficient work in their offices. The next ten sections of the bill, up to and including section 54, relate to the employés of the office, and these sections are substantially the law at present. With section 55 the bill begins to treat with the question of printing for Congress.

The committee felt in dealing with this matter that if economy was to be practiced, it would not be proper to attempt to enforce that economy in the various Executive Departments of the Government alone, but that it should also be applied in our own cases—that is, in printing for the two Houses of Congress. It will be found, therefore, by an examination, that very large reductions have been made in Congressional printing. I will endeavor to call attention to reductions in detail as we progress with consideration of the bill by items. While the committee endeavored to reduce the quantity of printing for Congress they also sought for means for better distribution of documents; to this end it will be seen that there is provision for an officer to be called superintendent of documents to be appointed by the President.

There is already provision in the law for such an officer; he is called the superintendent of documents in the Interior Department, and he has a clerical force employed under him. The object of this change is to enlarge the powers somewhat of this officer and to widen or to increase his duties. He is to be given the general supervision of the distribution of all public documents, and it is proposed to commit to his custody all documents subject to distribution, excepting those printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress, which are to be distributed on the order of Members and Delegates, or such as are for the especial official use of the Executive Departments.

It will be seen that it is not intended to take away from members of Congress the right to distribute in their own way their quotas of documents. It is provided that all documents—and I ask the attention of the House again to this point——

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Right on this point may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish the gentleman would wait a moment till he ascertains whether I have answered him before I leave this branch of the subject.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I thought you had finished the subject about which I wish to inquire.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is provided that all documents at present remaining in charge or possession of the several Executive Departments, bureaus, and offices of the Government, not required for official use, shall be delivered to the superintendent of documents, and that hereafter all public documents accumulating in said Departments, bureaus, and offices, not needed for official use, shall be annually turned over to him. It is further provided that the officers of the Senate and of the House shall cause invoices to be made of all books and documents in and about the Capitol, other than those belonging to the quotas of members, and they shall be turned over to him; and further, that wherever in the division among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of extra copies of documents, printed for the use of Congress, there shall be a remainder beyond the number of 25 to each House, such surplus above 25 shall be turned over by the superintendent of the folding rooms to him.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does the gentleman mean to be understood as saying that the quota of Agricultural Reports, for instance, belonging to each member is not to be distributed by this distributer of documents upon franks furnished to him by members for that purpose?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say, Mr. Speaker, that any member may do that if he prefers to do so; but the document room is maintained and the folding room is maintained, and each member's quota, if he so desires, will be sent from these rooms upon franks furnished to our own subordinate officers here.

A MEMBER. That is all right.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that is the law now.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Allow me another question. I do not understand that under the provisions of this bill our quota of any document comes to us in fact, but I do understand from the reading of the bill, and it seems to be plain, that we are to furnish franks to this public officer, who is to attach them to the documents and send them out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman does not get the exact idea of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. But I get the language of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We send lists to him in order that a duplication may be prevented. But let us discuss that when we get to it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I thought you had reached that point now, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. McCREARY. Allow me one question. Does this bill take away from a member of the House of Representatives the right to have his books sent to his room or to any other point where he may desire to have them sent, so that he can distribute them himself?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. That is the point I wanted to have made clear. Does this bill turn the documents over to the member himself? Can he get them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not turn them over to the superintendent of documents; it expressly says they shall not be turned over to him.

Mr. McCREARY. Are we to understand that under this bill there is to be the same freedom with regard to sending off our books that there has been heretofore? We are not compelled to send our lists to any office, are we? Can we not order our books to be sent to our rooms?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are required to furnish this officer a list in order that he may prevent duplication in the sending of documents.

Mr. McCREARY. Why should he have our lists?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We will discuss that question hereafter.

Mr. McCREARY. Why should we not have the right to distribute these documents ourselves?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The object to be attained is to prevent a duplication in the distribution, and in order that he may distribute the large number of books which we propose to turn over to him under this bill, as I will show in a moment.

Mr. McCREARY. I fail to see any good reason why I should not send to my constituent a certain book, even if a Senator from our State had already sent him a copy of the same book.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is none in the world. This bill provides that the member may send all the books himself if he wishes to do so; but it provides further, that if one of the Senators from the gentleman's State has furnished to a particular man a a book that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] proposes to send the same book to, this officer shall notify the gentleman that that particular person has already been furnished with a copy of the book by the Senator. If you wish to send that constituent another copy, it goes to him, but that copy is sent with a knowledge on your part that he has already been supplied.

Mr. McCREARY. That is the provision in this bill that I object to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, we will discuss that question hereafter.

Mr. McCREARY. I think I ought to have the right to have books sent to my room and ought to be allowed to distribute them as I choose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You will have that right under this bill; we do not interfere with that.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, if it is in the line of this discussion.

Mr. BUTLER. It is. Would not the effect of thus furnishing these lists to the document room be simply a notification to the Administration that such and such men are our friends?

A MEMBER. Certainly it would.

Mr. BUTLER. And would it not allow the Administration to take any advantage of that information that it might choose to take?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, we shall have the Administration the next time; and our Administration will have notice then when that is done, but I hardly think any injury can be done in that way. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CHIPMAN. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee this question. Suppose a member under this bill orders his documents to be sent to him in bulk; will they be sent?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They will.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Sent to him personally?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They will be sent to him here or anywhere that he wants them sent.

It is provided that all of these documents so received by this superintendent shall be distributed by him as deemed best for the public good, preference being given to libraries and to the completion of broken sets, and to lists furnished him by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates; and he is required to deliver to members of Congress printed lists of all public documents in his possession for distribution.

This officer, Mr. Speaker, is also charged with the sale of documents that are turned over to him and all documents hereafter published for sale by the other officers of the Government, and to cover the money received therefrom into the Treasury of the United States. Other duties are imposed upon him, which will appear when the bill is considered by items.

The superintendent of documents when appointed takes the place of that officer now in the Interior Department. We have, as I have already stated, a superintendent of documents who is appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. This bill simply enlarges his duties and makes him an appointee of the President. The necessity for the appointment of this officer will appear when it is made known that in the basement and the subterranean passages of this Capitol building there are now stored an immense number of books and documents not belonging to the quotas of members of Congress.

How many volumes there are so deposited no man knows. The lowest estimate placed thereon by intelligent persons who have made an examination of the subject is that there are 250,000 volumes so stored, while by some the number is estimated as being very considerably larger. In the basement of the Interior Department it is estimated that there are over 200,000 copies stored, and a member of this House who has examined them places the number at a much larger figure. In nearly all the Executive Departments very large accumulations of surplus documents exist. Recently in a house-cleaning at the White House over 5,000 books were sent to the superintendent in the Interior Department. These books have accumulated from time to time in the various committee rooms of the Capitol, and have been deposited in the vaults here for storage and safe-keeping. They do not belong to any of us. They are not borne on the quotas of members, but, as I have said, have been transported to the basement of the building from the various committee rooms and from the library and document rooms of the House and Senate. They have been there, many of them, for years, rotting and molding. They need to be distributed to the people of the country.

This bill provides that they shall be turned over to this superintendent of documents, and that he shall distribute them to the libraries throughout the country; and if gentlemen will read the bill they will see that they are to be distributed by him, preference being given to lists furnished to him by members of Congress, he being first required to hand each member printed lists of the various books and documents so subject to distribution.

Mr. HEARD. Let me suggest, if the gentleman from Tennessee pleases, that as they now stand we can not get them for distribution at all, nor can we do anything with them. That is to say, they are outside of our quotas.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct. As they stand now they are entirely outside of our quotas, and we have no right or authority to send them out to our constituents.

Mr. JOHNSTONE of South Carolina. Since the gentleman from Tennessee has referred to the question I asked him some time ago, I will ask him now to be kind enough to point out to the House what possible benefit there can accrue to the public from having an official to be informed as to the number of men with whom, as the servants of the people, we are in communication?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have cited the main object in providing for this arrangement. I do not know that we can prevent duplication unless somebody knows to whom we are sending books. But if that particular feature of the bill is objected to it is open to amendment, and can be modified or entirely stricken out if the House so determines.

Mr. HEARD. The object is, as the gentleman from Tennessee has stated, to prevent duplication.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. Now, if it is a question with us whether it is of sufficient utility that we shall prevent this duplication by sending these lists there, that portion of the bill can be stricken out without interfering with the general scope of the measure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly. But it seemed to me that where one man could send to members of Congress and procure 40 copies of one book as valuable as the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, which our people are clamoring for, we as a committee ought to suggest some remedy for the evil. I do not believe that a man who wants 40 or 50 or 100 copies of a book, possibly for sale or speculation, ought to be allowed to send to the different members, each one of whom may send him a copy without being aware of the fact that he has been already supplied by his associates on this floor.

Mr. OWENS. Suppose I think that some gentleman in my district knows more about horses and horse-raising and those engaged in the care of horses than any one else, and I send him 40 copies of that book for distribution, do you think that Mr. Harrison can pick out a better man to send books to in my district? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCREARY. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that it would be improper for members of Congress to send 40 books on Diseases of the Horse to one constituent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I did not say that. I did not say it or anything like it.

Mr. McCREARY. Then may I ask what the gentleman did say?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said I did not think that one man ought to be permitted to write to forty members of Congress, and obtain that many copies of a book as valuable as the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse without the forty members having knowledge that he was procuring so many copies.

Mr. McCREARY. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he personally or his committee has any information as to the suggestion he makes that men have written to forty members of Congress and gotten copies of these various books?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I intended to state, if I did not state it, that it appears from the testimony taken before the committee that one man actually applied to forty members and procured 40 copies of one book.

Mr. JOHNSTONE of South Carolina. Did he not distribute them among the people?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know. I suppose that he sold them at a dollar apiece and put the money in his own pocket. It costs the Government about $1 each to publish these books, and it was making money for him to procure them in that way.

Now, this bill will not prevent that from being done if members with full knowledge desire that it shall be done. If a member wishes to send an additional book to a man who chooses to apply to him for it, there is nothing to prevent him from sending it. But it will enable the superintendent of documents to have information as to such cases where there is a manifest effort to procure the books in that manner, and members of Congress will have an opportunity of knowing whether they are distributing them in the manner best calculated to promote the public interest.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, the objection that I have to this particular part of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee is to that which says that the general superintendent shall have supervision of the distribution of all public documents.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I beg the gentleman to wait until we get to that item.

Mr. McCREARY. It further says that our lists shall be sent to that man and that he shall send out the books. I object to that part of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I decline to yield to the gentleman for a speech on that item of the bill until we reach it, and then I hope the gentleman will give us the benefit of his wisdom on that section; but for the present it is not open to amendment, and his objection can not be made material just now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the 250,000 volumes of books at present in the basement and subterranean passages of the Capitol, which do not belong to members of Congress and can not be distributed by them, there are in the Interior Department over 200,000 copies of volumes of books which ought to be distributed to the people. In nearly all of the Executive Departments of this Government very large accumulations of surplus documents exist. These books and documents thus stored away represent, as I have stated, the accumulations of years. Many of them are valuable, while others are comparatively worthless. But one thing is certain. These depositories should be cleared out of all such publications and the country should have the benefit of them. This bill provides for their intelligent distribution by this officer, the superintendent of documents, who will make the distribution mainly under the direction of members of Congress, and it will prevent such an accumulation in the future.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will if it relates to this branch of the subject.

Mr. BOATNER. It has been stated here in this discussion that under the provisions of this bill if a member should desire to send any number of copies of any document or documents to any one person in his district for distribution it could not be done; in other words, that he could make the distribution only on lists which should furnish but one document to each person. Is there any such provision in the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no such provision in the bill, and nobody who understood the provisions of the bill has made such a statement.

Mr. BOATNER. It has been stated by some gentleman in the discussion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not be responsible for the statements of other gentlemen.

Mr. BOATNER. I was asking simply for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am very glad to give the information. There is no such section and no such provision as that in the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Why not allow these extra documents that are stored away to be distributed or apportioned to the members of Congress, and give them six months or a year to distribute them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer that by saying that no gentleman on the floor knows what books there are.

Mr. PICKLER. We would know when they were apportioned.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But they can not be apportioned unless we know what books there are, or until a catalogue is made.

Mr. PICKLER. But if we pass a law to that effect, it can be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are trying to pass a law which I think is better than that, and it provides that these facts shall be elicited, that there shall be a catalogue of them, and that catalogue shall be placed in your hands and mine; and then we will make out lists of those books that we want to go to our constituents, and have them sent in that way, provided they can be obtained by that officer.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Will the superintendent be under any obligation to send the books that are mentioned on the lists sent him, and, if so, how many?

Mr. HEARD. This bill says "preference shall be given," and so forth.

Mr. PICKLER. Preference given to how many, and for what time? Will the rule be "first come, first served?"

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not answer that, Mr. Speaker. I imagine no gentleman would undertake to have sent to his constituents all of any one publication, but that every gentleman would select such as his constituents would need, and that a general endeavor would be made to have them sent out fairly.

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly if my constituents were asking for a particular book, I would take all of the copies of that book that I could get.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That would be right and proper, and I suppose the gentleman would send his list to the superintendent, and if it could be filled it would be filled. Now, Mr. Speaker, the point is that these books can not be distributed now in their present condition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, if it relates to this subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Section 75, as I understand it, authorizes the superintendent of documents to dispense with the House folding room whenever, in his judgment, he thinks it is necessary. Does it not authorize him absolutely to abolish it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to enter upon the discussion of section 75 until we reach it. I hope the gentleman will not insist now. I will be glad to give any information I can after we take up the bill by sections; but if we do that now, I will never be able to complete any orderly discussion of the bill as a whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman further about that at a future time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The superintendent of documents is to be further charged with the sale of documents. Heretofore he has been making sales thereof, and last year he turned into the Treasury about $3,500 from this source. As all of the Departments are to turn over to him all of their extra or surplus documents, and his supply is to be so largely increased from the other sources mentioned by me, thus affording him much more facilities for answering the demands made upon him for books and documents, it is thought by him that under the operation of this bill in a short time his sales would amount to $10,000 a year, which would go very largely toward paying all expenses of his office and the wages of his employés.

By reference to the bill it will also appear that through him will be made an exchange of books and documents by members of Congress and librarians. If a gentleman who lives in the city of New York does not want the agricultural reports and prefers the report on commerce, or navigation, or shipbuilding, or something of that kind, he can very easily find Representatives from rural districts who will make an interchange with him and get his agricultural reports and supply the people in the agricultural districts.

Mr. DICKERSON. I want to ask my friend if he does not think the committee could relieve them of this surplus number of books without resorting to this method of distributing them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will be glad to have the coöperation of the gentleman in devising a better plan than we propose.

Mr. BABBITT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BABBITT. I want to know whether or not the documents included in these items which are sold are distributed among the people, or whether the books sold go into pulp or something of that kind. Are these public documents furnished to the people when sold?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The sale of documents to which I refer means this, Mr. Speaker: It means that if any citizen in this country wants to purchase a publication he goes to the superintendent and pays him the price thereof. The books are delivered to him for his own use, and the money goes into the Treasury of the United States.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, while it is shown that it is a matter of economy to make this change in the duties of this officer, and to enlarge his powers and duties, the benefits to accrue to the Government and members of Congress and to the public in the way of convenience and in the method of distribution and sale of all public documents can not be well estimated or described.

Section 61 of the bill provides that there shall be one document room in the Senate and one in the House of Representatives. There are now two document rooms in the House. The committee could see no good reason why two document rooms should be maintained in the House, and the bill abolishes one of them. The superintendent of the House document room will be appointed by the Doorkeeper. The document room in the House which has heretofore been under the control of the Clerk has been charged with the duty of distributing what is known as the "reserve" of public documents. This "reserve" has a technical meaning, as members know, and is made up of various publications, which the Clerk is required to send to members of Congress.

Under the law at present one bound copy of each publication made during a Congressional term is required to be sent to each member. These are sent whether he desires them or not, without regard to their use or value. They reach him, commencing from early after the close of a Congress, on and on for possibly a year or longer after adjournment. As they are bound one copy is sent to each member. The change proposed by this bill in this case is to allow each member to have one copy of every publication bound for his own use where he desires to do so, but it does not require him to receive them all. This change, it is thought, will save the Government a very large sum of money and at the same time give each member every publication he desires. The volumes of this "reserve" for members are now handled by the document room under the control of the Clerk of the House. It is proposed in the bill, as I have stated, to allow the members the option of having these volumes bound or not, as they choose. Intelligent witnesses who testified before the committee are of the opinion that not more than one-third of such publications will be bound for members if this option is given.

If this be true, two-thirds of the expense incurred in supplying members will be saved. For illustration, there were 206 volumes published by the Fifty-first Congress. One copy of each of these publications must be sent to the 430 members thereof, including the number sent to members of the House and one or two officers of these bodies. Thus there have been and will be sent to members of that Congress 88,580 of these volumes. They will cost for printing and binding in the style in which they are sent to members from $1 to $1.50 per volume, or in the aggregate, say, $125,000. If only one-third will be called for under the provisions of this bill there will be a saving of about $80,000 in this instance, and yet each member will receive all that he desires.

As this very large reduction will be made, the necessity for the Clerk's document room in the House, which handles this reserve, is removed or greatly lessened. These volumes for the Fifty-first Congress have not yet all been handled or sent out from the Clerk's document room, but they will be in time.

The provisions of the bill which are to control the printing and binding for the various Executive Departments and bureaus of the Government begin with section 77. If gentlemen will note the report and the copy of the bill they will find a clerical or typographical error at that point. The heading there is misleading, inasmuch as it says "Congressional printing." It should be "departmental printing."

The entire question of departmental printing, which is a vast one and very intricate in its details, has been carefully gone over by the committee. While Congress for itself might enforce the most rigid economy and care in the public printing, yet if the Departments were allowed to print without any limitations or restrictions, it is plain that existing evils would be only partially cured. It is sought, therefore, to largely reduce the printing to be executed for the Departments. The most effective way of imposing a check on them, it was thought, was to provide by a permanent law for all of the annual publications of the Departments where it could be done. If these changes are made the appropriation therefor will be permanent and regular, and need not be included in the sums annually set forth in the appropriation bills to be used in the discretion of heads of Departments.

Then in addition to this, to make more effective the check, it is proposed to take away from these executive officers the discretion and right to have printing and binding done in the Government Printing Office without any limit or restriction, except that they keep themselves within the limit of the appropriation for printing made for the Department. In providing for the publication for these annual reports and documents the committee have, in nearly every case, made considerable reduction in the quantity or numbers to be printed. By section 92 of the bill it is expressly provided that no report, publication, or document emanating from the Executive Departments or bureaus of the Government shall be printed in excess of the number of 1,000 each in any one fiscal year without express authorization therefor by Congress, with an exception which is not hurtful.

I am not here to charge that any executive officer has heretofore abused the discretion given him under the law to print and bind publications for his Department. It is the custom for Congress in making appropriations in annual bills to allot or set apart to each Department a sum for printing and binding. This is meant to cover the current necessary printing in the Department. This sum is expended upon orders by heads of the Departments, and the objects and the purposes of the expenditures are largely in the discretion of said officers, and not infrequently it appears that this power or discretion is exercised upon the recommendation of a subordinate. This of necessity must be true.

These executive officers may expend the allowance to their Departments in printing and binding books, which, though they may be valuable in themselves, should not be printed and bound except by order of Congress expressly made. For illustration, one Secretary during the last year had printed and bound at the Government Printing Office 40,000 copies of one book, a special report, without any express authority from Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that the Report on the Diseases of the Horse to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, if he could print and bind 40,000 copies upon his own requisition, he could print and bind a million copies, provided his allowance in the appropriation bill was not exhausted. He could use all the appropriation made for current printing in his Department for one book and then call on Congress for a deficiency. For one, I do not believe this is right. The bill takes away this power from the departmental officers.

Mr. BLAND. Is the gentleman from Tennessee willing to give the name of the document he mentioned, of which 40,000 copies were printed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. And under what circumstances?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse.

Mr. PICKLER. That is a good expenditure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But it is not a question as to whether it is a good publication or not, or a good expenditure, for if he can make a good expenditure he can also make a bad one.

Mr. BRETZ. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that a great many of these public documents sent out in this way are sent "with the compliments of the Department?"

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think that is quite often the case.

Mr. BRETZ. Instead of giving us the credit of sending them out with our "compliments," they are sent out with the "compliments of the Department."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman, that when they are sent out that way he will find that the "compliments of the Department" are not put on those copies which are sent out by members, but on the special edition printed on the requisition of those officers. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRETZ. Is not that true of the Argricultural Reports of 1890?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That may be true of them; I do not know. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state that it may be true with regards to reports sent out from that office printed upon the order of the Secretary, but I do not think that it is true as to the reports sent out by members of Congress.

Mr. BRETZ. I think if you will examine you will find that it is that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will pardon me further, I would like to ask another question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. The question that I propounded a moment ago was intended to reach a state of affairs that I understood existed during the last autumnal election. The Secretary of the Treasury undertook to furnish the country with a statement of the amount of money in the country, and by a circular containing statistics made up a campaign document. I do not know how many of these were sent out or whether the Secretary of the Treasury had authority for their distribution. I got one of them myself. I do not know where it was sent or whether the distribution was general, but I know that it was printed and distributed when that was a question in the campaign.

Now, what I want is for the gentleman to inform us whether the head of any one of these Departments is authorized by law to print a campaign document and circulate it in that way. I do not know whether he has such power or not, and if he has it ought to be stopped.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course I can not speak as to all the publications sent out by all of these Departments. I know nothing about the publication to which the gentleman refers; but this bill provides that no report shall be printed by the Government Printing Office by order of the head of a Department in excess of 1,000, except when authorization therefor is given by Congress. It takes away his discretion to use the money that is set apart by Congress in the annual appropriation bills for departmental printing—what I understand to be the current printing of those Departments, and the using of it for printing and binding large editions.

To recur to the matter of distribution. The distribution of the matter printed is of vital importance, for without a proper distribution, without the means of getting into the hands of the people governmental publications, the expenditure of such large sums of money for such purposes is almost criminal, and is certainly altogether inexcusable. The methods of distribution provided for by the bill I have briefly adverted to when speaking of the superintendent of documents and his duties. This matter, however, is largely one of detail and is governed by the law in each case where the publication is ordered of the particular document. I will, therefore, if necessary to do so, make further reference to this matter when discussing the several items of the bill.

Some gentlemen have asked me to state what the total saving will be to the Government by reason of the provisions of this bill and the changes it makes in the existing statutes if it becomes a law. I can not undertake to make any definite promise or specify any sum in the aggregate that will be saved. But this I can safely say: The reductions will be large, very large in the way of money, bnt above this mere question of money the greatest benefits resulting from the bill will be those which come by reason of the reforms in the methods of printing documents and their distribution, and the arranging in an orderly manner all the printing laws of the Government, so that they can be easily consulted and understood, and so that from time to time other and further modifications thereof can be intelligently made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the time of the gentleman be extended until he has completed his remarks.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON (resuming). Now, Mr. Speaker, I will state some of the reductions made by the committee, just to give the House an idea of what we have endeavored to do in the way of retrenchment.

The table below indicates the number of volumes heretofore printed of the reports and documents mentioned, and the number to be printed under this bill:

Reports and documents.	Heretofore printed.	Printed under this bill.
Agricultural Report	400,000	300,000
Animal Industry Report	50,000	40,000
Coast and Geodetic Survey Report	5,000	2,800
Commercial Relations	5,000	3,000
Foreign Relations	6,000	3,000
Ethnology Report	15,500	8,000
Fish and Fisheries	11,000	8,000
Bulletins of Fish Commission	5,000	4,000
Health Officer of District of Columbia	2,500	1,500
Civil Service Commission	31,000	23,000
Commissioner of Education	44,000	35,000
Geological Survey	18,500	12,000
Commissioner of Labor	35,000	30,000
Interstate Commerce Commission	21,000	5,000
Session Laws	13,000	7,000
Message of President and Documents	25,000	15,000
Academy of Sciences	2,000	1,500
Memoirs of Academy	4,500	2,500
Smithsonian Institution	19,000	10,000
Statistical Abstract	16,000	12,000
Commerce and Navigation	8,000	3,000
Precious Metals	6,000	3,000
Mineral Resources	6,000	3,000
Union Pacific Railway	3,000	1,500
Eulogies	12,500	5,000

These reductions are very large, to which may be added that which it is estimated will be saved to the Government under this bill by the change made in the "reserve" or private sets which are furnished to members of Congress; the reduction during the session of Congress being $80,000, the annual reduction will be one-half thereof, or $40,000.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman state what will be the difference between the cost of printing the number of copies of the report on ethnology now printed and the cost of the number recommended by the committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The practice heretofore has been to print 15,500 copies; we propose to reduce the number to 8,000, a reduction of 7,500 copies. The cost per volume is, I think, in the neighborhood of $2.

Mr. PICKLER. Is not the cost chiefly in the plates?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Chiefly.

Mr. DINGLEY. Therefore the extra copies would not cost anything like so much per volume.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly not so much as the first copies.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill provides that after the printing of the number of copies of any document ordered by Congress, if extra copies are desired by any gentleman they can be obtained at cost from the Government Printing Office, if application is made within a reasonable time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The law governing the sale of documents is not changed. If a man wants extra copies of a document he must give his order before it goes to press, unless he wishes to buy the documents afterwards from the superintendent of documents, or, in some cases, from the Public Printer.

Mr. HEARD. I understand that it is provided in the bill that extra copies might be obtained at cost, while the old law provided, I believe, that they might be obtained at cost with 10 per cent added.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill does not change the law in that respect.

In reference to the proposed reduction in the number of eulogies to be printed, I want to say that while the reduction may seem very large, provision is made for what we think a much better distribution of them than has prevailed heretofore. Instead of apportioning the whole number printed among all the members of the House, the bill provides that they shall be mainly distributed in the State from which the dead member came. Details will appear by reference to that part of the bill.

I now submit a statement of the appropriations for printing and binding, 1881 to 1891:

1881.
Regular appropriation	$1,606,500.00
Deficiency	410,500.00

September 25, 1890, Animal Industry Reports 1889 and 1890	50,000.00
December 5, 1890, Bureau of Statistics Report	8,284.00
December 18, 1890, Public Lands and Pension Decisions	10,000.00
March 2, 1891, Industrial Art	23,500.00
March 3, 1891, Agricultural Report 1891	200,000.00
March 3, 1891, Diseases of Horse	75,000.00
March 2, 1891, Labor Report	21,000.00
Deficiency	753,500.00
		3,639,284.00

It thus appears that in ten years the cost of public printing has almost doubled, and hence it seems necessary that some check or restriction should be adopted to prevent its further increase.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask that the bill be taken up and read by paragraphs for consideration and amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill which deserves a good deal of examination. I think its further consideration may very properly be suspended until to-morrow, and I therefore move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GOODNIGHT). The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MILLER] has made that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw that motion in order to allow me to make a request which seems to be in accord with the wishes of a number of members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw his motion?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the day after to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal, so that members may have the opportunity, if they so desire, to examine carefully the bill and report.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the day after to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I object unless I can have just three minutes now to refer to one provision of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from New Jersey will proceed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] I asked him a question as to the effect which this bill would have upon the distribution by us of our quotas of these books. The gentleman answered me according to his understanding of the bill. But in section 62 I find this authority given to the superintendent of documents:

> He shall have general supervision of the distribution of all public documents, and to his custody shall be committed all documents subject to distribution, excepting those printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress, which are to be distributed on the order of Members and Delegates, etc.

In section 63 it is provided that these orders—

> Shall be sent to the superintendent of documents on franked or other labels, or in lists, which shall be kept confidential, etc.

In the same section, on page 25 of the bill, it is provided that—

> As soon as practicable after receiving and recording orders for the distribution of documents the superintendent of documents shall transmit said orders to the superintendents of the folding rooms of Congress as the orders may be given by members of the two Houses, respectively, by which officers the documents shall be folded and mailed.

Those are the words of the bill, and in no other way is there any provision made for the distribution of any book by a member.

Mr. MORSE. That is so; there is no escape from that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]?

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the Chair state the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in at the time the request was made, but is informed it was to this effect: That the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the day after to-morrow, and that then it be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal under the rule already adopted.

Mr. MCCREARY. Unless there be some objection I make this suggestion: The gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee [Mr. RICHARDSON], has elaborately explained the provisions of the bill, and it seems to me we are now prepared to take up the measure under the five-minute rule and amend it section by section. I therefore suggest to the gentleman that he modify his request so as to provide that when the bill shall be taken up on the day after to-morrow it be proceeded with under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] that that agreement concerning the method of consideration is included as a part of the order already adopted by the House; and the only effect of making it operate now would be to cut off debate except under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MCCREARY. That is exactly what I desire to accomplish. Personally I do not see any necessity for further general debate on the bill. I believe it very important, however, to take up the bill section by section and discuss it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that according to the order under which the House is proceeding, when it is the will of the House to close general debate the course suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky will be the method of consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], I will only say that if there is in the sections to which he has referred any such difficulty as he suggests, it will be agreeable to me, when we reach those sections, to have the difficulty remedied by such amendments as a majority of the House may desire.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the proposed amendments are in harmony with the bill, and are not too radical, I am sure there will be no objection to them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The bill contains a good many features which I approve.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] submit a request that general debate be now considered as closed?

Mr. MCCREARY. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to closing general debate now?

Mr. DINGLEY. There may be some desire to have general debate for a while longer.

Mr. MCCREARY. If any gentleman desires general debate of course I will not insist upon closing it; but it seems to me the proper way to discuss this bill is to read it section by section, and discuss each one in detail.

Mr. MORSE. That is right.

Mr. MCCREARY. I therefore suggest that the general debate be closed now, and that when the bill be next taken up it be by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that which perhaps he does not know, that the House has already provided by special rule that this bill shall be considered item by item in the manner he suggests. After the bill has been read and discussed in the general debate it will be open for amendment and discussion as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, with the understanding, however, that the right to move the previous question, if any member chooses to do so, shall be given, for the purpose of shutting off debate at any time. Of course that will follow if a majority of the House second the demand for the previous question. But so far as I am individually concerned, I repeat what I said before, that I do not desire to cut off the fullest debate on any item of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that general debate be now closed?

Mr. DINGLEY. I object to that part of the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCREARY. Then I move that general debate be limited to, say, one hour. Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. DINGLEY. One hour would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. McCREARY. Then one hour if gentlemen desire to be heard. I do not want to cut off anybody.

Mr. JOHNSTONE of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the scope of this bill, its purpose is to bring about a consolidation of existing laws on the subject of public printing, and in addition to that to reduce the entire matter of public printing to system. If we are not to have an imperfect bill, if we are to have a measure that will be complete when it is enacted into law, the best plan of procuring it is to have adequate debate upon it, and for that reason I am in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I agree with my friend from South Carolina very fully. There are many things in the bill to which I object, and there are some things of which I approve. But general debate is not apt to point out the objectionable features of the bill. I am in favor of having one hour's general debate, as suggested by the gentleman from Maine, but after that I am in favor of closing the general debate and having the fullest and freest discussion under the five-minute rule on each section of the bill, wherein we can show the objections, if any, existing to each particular provision of any particular section, and wherein you may offer as many amendments as you desire or see the necessity for. But I can not see any benefit to be derived from two, three, or four hours of general discussion. Let us give to each section of the bill full consideration, beginning at the beginning, and wherever a section is objectionable let its objectionable features be pointed out and the necessary changes be made by amendment. That is the way, in my judgment, that we should proceed with the public business.

Mr. JOHNSTONE of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no possible force that is keeping the gentleman from Kentucky from the discussion of the bill except his own volition. If he chooses to discuss a particular portion of the bill let him do so. But let those of us who wish to see the scheme perfected have a larger opportunity for debate than the gentleman seems disposed to accord to us.

Mr. McCREARY. How much general debate would the gentleman suggest? How much does he want?

Mr. JOHNSTONE of South Carolina. What else are we doing? We had just as well discuss the bill. I object to any limitation upon the debate.

The gentleman from Kentucky will reflect, Mr. Speaker, that this joint committee which framed the bill has had five, six, or seven months to consider its work; and certainly that which they considered five or six months not too long a time to devote to can not properly be comprehended by us in so short a space of time as the one hour suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. McKAIG. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well to recall to the House the additional fact that besides the five or six months that the special joint committee have devoted to the elucidation of the subject of printing for this Government they have also made an examination of witnesses, perhaps the best informed that could be brought before that committee, upon the subjects committed to them. This report is the outcome of the investigation of the committee, based upon the experimental knowledge of the men employed in the different departments of the Government who are qualified to give information upon the subjects. And to properly understand every section of the bill it would be well for each member of the House to take and examine not only the bill itself but the accompanying report, which has been introduced into the Senate of the United States as well as the House, which gives you not only the sections of the bill in detail but gives you the annotations which will enable every member to see and understand the exact changes which have been made in the existing laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate is not in order, but of course desires to listen to the gentleman from Maryland. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he wishes to be heard further upon the subject.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McKAIG], with the consent of the House.

Mr. KcKAIG. No, I do not wish to debate the bill, if debate is not in order. There seemed to be a general discussion going on.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to get to the discussion of the bill section by section as soon as possible; but as I observe that some of our friends wish to continue the general debate and to speak on the entire bill, I have no intention to cut off debate. I think we ought to have full debate, and therefore I withdraw the motion to limit debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then is on the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Wednesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, when it is to be proceeded with under the order heretofore adopted. Is there objection.

Mr. REED. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine objects.

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his motion?

Mr. McCREARY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama temporarily.

REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to take up a Senate resolution (S. R. 18) and pass it. It is for the purpose of appointing regents to the Smithsonian Institution. Unless it is done to-day it will be impossible to get them here in time to have a quorum at the annual meeting on the 25th.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection. The Chair will inquire if this is the form in which the resolution passed the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It passed the Senate in the form in which it is printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman introduce it as an original resolution?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, I introduce it as a Senate resolution with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the House will have to act upon the engrossed bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. There is no engrossed bill here. The Senate passed it in manuscript, because it was important to get it through, and the Senator who had charge of it has asked me to have it passed through the House. It is merely a formal matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But as it is a joint resolution, if the House is to take action upon the matter acted upon by the Senate the official copy of the resolution from the Senate will have to be before the House.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Then I ask to have it passed as an original House resolution, and then it can be sent back to the Senate for immediate action there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to the present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 12) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than members of Congress, shall be filled by the appointment of William Preston Johnston, of Louisiana, in place of Noah Porter, of Connecticut, resigned, and the appointment of John B. Henderson, of Missouri, in place of Montgomery C. Meigs, deceased, and by the reappointment of Henry Coppée, of Pennsylvania, whose term of office expired on December 26, 1891.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that as the Senate resolution is not before the House he can accomplish his object by asking the consideration of this as a House resolution.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is what I do now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I object. My objection is on the ground that the original resolution from the Senate has been referred to the Committee on the Library; and if the gentleman will allow me time I will report it to the House to-morrow with an amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I would like to say to the House——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

By unanimous consent, bills of the following titles were introduced, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the several committees named below:

SUBPORT OF ENTRY, WEST POINT, VA.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 4004) to establish West Point, Va., a subport of entry and delivery in the collection district of Richmond, Va.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LOANS ON REAL ESTATE BY NATIONAL BANKS.

By Mr. TURPIN: A bill (H. R. 4005) to amend the seventh subdivision of section 5136 and the second subdivision of section 5137 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill does not give any indication of the committee to which this bill should be referred.

Mr. TURPIN. I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. It relates to allowing national banks the privilege of loaning money on real estate as collateral security.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks under the rule it should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. TURPIN. That was the first bill I introduced in this Congress, and it was referred to that committee last year, and I never heard from it any more, although I tried very hard to hear from it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rule it should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, unless a motion is made to the contrary.

Mr. TURPIN. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the bill? The title gives no information at all as to the subject of it.

Mr. TURPIN. I will tell the gentleman what the bill is. It is simply to allow national banks the privilege of loaning money on real estate security.

Mr. DINGLEY. Obviously it does not belong to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. TURPIN. I would like to have it go to that committee, because I never could get the other committee to notice it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. TURPIN] moves the reference of the bill to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will move to amend that by referring it to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. DINGLEY, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, in the absence of objection.

QUINCY PONTOON BRIDGE COMPANY.

By Mr. WIKE: A bill (H. R. 4006) authorizing the Quincy Pontoon Bridge Company to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Mississippi River, at the city of Quincy, in the State of Illinois—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CONGRESSIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

By Mr. HAYES (by request): A bill (H. R. 4007) to establish an office of Congressional correspondence and Department business—to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

ADMISSION OF THE TERRITORY OF UTAH.

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (by request): A bill (H. R. 4008) enabling the people of Utah to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States—to the Committee on the Territories.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE TO HOUSE LOCKSMITH.

By Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island: A resolution to furnish additional assistance to the locksmith of the House—to the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result, the Chair desires to lay before the House the following requests of members:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. O'FERRALL for five days, on account of absence from the city.

To Mr. CUTTING, for one week.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois obtained unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, memorials, petitions, and indorsements and reports from the Chamber of Commerce of Chicago and other leading Western and Southern cities for the establishment of a first-class steamship mail service from Tampa, Fla., to Aspinwall, Central America.

Then (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Private bills were, under the order adopted by the House January 5, delivered to the Clerk, and severally referred as follows, namely:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the Senate a report of the Secretary of State in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 12th instant, making inquiries regarding payments of the awards of the Claims Commission under the convention of July 4, 1868, between the United States and Mexico.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, January 18, 1892.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, in the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], will lie on the table temporarily, and be printed.

Mr. VEST. I should like to have the accompanying communication from the Secretary of State read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 14, 1892.

The Secretary of State has the honor to submit herewith a report in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the United States of the 12th instant, respecting the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission which sat at Washington under the convention of July 4, 1868, between the United States and Mexico.

The awards of the Commission were rendered in Mexican gold, American gold, and American currency. By the terms of the protocol between the Secretary of State and the Mexican minister under date of January 31, 1878, the various currencies were reduced to the basis of American gold. Upon this basis the net indebtedness of Mexico to the United States, by reason of the awards, was ascertained to be $3,865,498.42.

This amount was paid in full to the United States by Mexico in fourteen annual installments in perfect accordance with the terms of the convention, the final payment having been made January 21, 1890.

The ascertainment of the proportionate share of each of the awards, numbering in all 187, in the total sum of the indemnity, is set forth in detail in the annexed table, marked "A."

Nearly all of these awards have been paid in full to the awardees or their assigns, the principal exceptions being the awards in favor of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Mining Company.

There is at present on deposit to the credit of the Secretary of State, with the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, on account of all awards of the Commission, the sum of $700,968.57.

Of this amount the sums of $287,833.77 and $403,030.08 are withheld, respectively, on account of the awards rendered in favor of Benjamin Weil and the La Abra Silver Mining Company. These sums aggregate $690,863.85, thus leaving of the sum above stated as being in the hands of the Secretary of State, only $10,104.72 yet to be distributed on account of outstanding interests among the other 185 awards. Deaths of the principals and failure of their administrators or executors to present their claims for the balances due them are the only causes why this sum of $10,104.72 remains undistributed. It is reasonable, however, to expect that the persons entitled to this remainder will present themselves in the near future.

In specific answer to that portion of the resolution which inquires "the amount of any award made under said convention that has been refused payment by the State Department, and what person or persons are now the claimants of interest in said awards, the payment of which has been refused," I have the honor to state that payments have been refused only in the two cases above referred to, namely those of "Benjamin Weil" and the "La Abra Mining Company," and that the annexed transcripts, marked "B" and "C," from the Department's docket, show in detail the dates and amounts of payments made on these awards, respectively, and the persons to whom paid, as well as briefs of the instruments on file in the Department showing what persons are the claimants of interests in these awards.

In answer to the concluding inquiry of the resolution, I have the honor to state that at no time has any part of the moneys received from Mexico been invested.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

To the PRESIDENT.

(With inclosures.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, with the accompanying papers, will lie on the table, and be printed.

SUPPLY OF CIRCULATION.

Mr. STANFORD. I desire to give notice that on Thursday morning next I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1204) to provide the Government with means sufficient to supply the national want of a sound circulating medium, and that I shall then ask the privilege of submitting a few remarks upon the measure.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of citizens of Stillwater, Minn., praying for the grant of a loan to the World's Columbian Fair, on condition that the exposition be not open on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of 34 citizens of Carnarvon, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill similar to what is commonly known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, of Detroit, Mich., praying that an appropriation be made for a military chapel at Arlington; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of legislation prohibiting the improper use of the flag of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the United Presbyterian Church of Bruce, Mich., praying that the World's Columbian Fair be closed on Sunday, in accordance with the law of God, the rights of man, and American precedents; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of the Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, signed by Rev. Richard S. Storrs, its president, and other officers of that organization, praying for the ratification of the Brussels treaty; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of the city council of Laredo, Tex., praying for the establishment of a military post at that place for the protection of the frontier; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of citizens of Medford, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation similar to what is commonly known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of District Assembly No. 210, Knights of Labor, of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of a bill to authorize the collection of statistics relative to the slums of cities; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PERKINS. I present resolutions in the nature of petitions from the Transmississippi Commercial Congress, the Western States Commercial Congress, and other bodies, praying for the passage of what is known and recognized as the Torrey bankruptcy bill. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to be considered in connection with the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 781) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams, of Omaha, Nebr., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 860) for the relief of Wells C. McCool, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 776) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 859) for the relief of First Lieut. James Regan, United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 209) to place Henry Zell on the retired list of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 78) making an appropriation for the improvement of the road to the national cemetery near Pensacola, Fla., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 12) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of the legal representatives of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union Agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 478) for the relief of Mrs. S. B. Duvall, widow of the late Rev. W. P. Duvall, deceased, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 734) for the relief of John McBean, of Umatilla County, Oregon, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 698) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to carry out in part the provisions of "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1889, and making appropriations for the same, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 3) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in regard to the election of President, to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall extend the term of the office of the President to the 30th of April, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 418) to change the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Missouri. It is a matter of very great importance to litigants, to the attorneys, and the judge of that district that the bill should be disposed of as soon as possible. It makes changes simply in the terms of the courts and it is of great importance that the public should know soon, if the bill is to become a law, what the changes are, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and the Senate, by unanimous consent, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, after line 14, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process, in either of said courts, shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change in time in holding the terms of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pendable, and triable at the terms herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 1701) for the benefit of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan, of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 1702) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 1703) to provide a more perfect organization for the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to state that we have a structure for this purpose which is superior, perhaps, to any in the world. It is well understood that we are going to need all the naval officers for the ships that we have built and are building, and therefore it becomes indispensable, almost, that we should seek for the head of this national observatory a man who will be willing to spend his life in the service, and one, perhaps, the best qualified in the United States. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1704) for the relief of William Welsh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1705) to prevent the manufacture of clothing in unhealthy places and the sale of clothing so manufactured; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. This is a bill to suppress what is known as the sweating system. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1706) to provide for the erection of an extension to the custom-house, court-house, etc., building at Toledo, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 1707) for the relief of Capt. W. M. Wallace; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1708) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah J. Waggoner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 1709) to grant to the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad Company a right of way across the Fort Montgomery military reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 1710) to authorize the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company to purchase certain land; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1711) providing for the payment of awards made to Creek Indians who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugees, and freedmen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 1712) to enable the Attorney-General to provide for the proper defense of cases brought in the Court of Claims for damages arising from Indian depredations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 1713) for the relief of George C. Foulk; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1714) to prevent cruelty to children in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1715) to amend "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of said District," approved January 26, 1887; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1716) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the power and authority heretofore existing in the mayor of the city of Washington in the matter of opening, altering, and changing alleys; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1717) for the relief of Samuel G. Hunter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 1718) to pay the State of Delaware for advance of money in the war of 1812, reported to be due by the Secretary of the Treasury; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1719) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury at his discretion to obtain the plans for the public buildings erected by direction of Congress under the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1720) for the relief of Henry Frank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1721) to increase the pay of certain noncommissioned officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1722) to provide for the examination and promotion of enlisted men of the Army to the grade of second lieutenant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1723) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 1724) for the relief of Louisa Q. Lovell and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1725) to protect employés and servants engaged in foreign and interstate commerce; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, to which a similar measure has been referred heretofore.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 1726) to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1727) to further regulate commerce ammong the States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1728) to prevent trusts, monopolies, and combinations in trade; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 1729) to amend section 2237 of the Revised Statutes in relation to the salaries of registers and receivers of United States land offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 1730) for the relief of A. P. H. Stewart and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 1731) to create a division in the judicial district of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 1732) for the erection of a custom-house and post-office building at Brunswick, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1733) to remove the political disabilities of John R. F. Tatnall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 33) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POST-OFFICE BUILDINGS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, that order is closed and the Calendar is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 427) to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices in towns and cities where the post-office receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000 annually was announced as first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a bill of great importance, and I take it, the Senator who reported the bill being absent, it is not proper to take it up now. I hope it will be passed over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MAMMOTH HOT SPRINGS.

The bill (S. 426) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the post-office at Mammoth Hot Springs, in the Yellowstone National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS CHAMBERS.

The bill (S. 1095) for the relief of Thomas Chambers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac, Mich., $3,654.56, in full compensation for the additional expenses incurred by him in carrying the Canada mails, as contractor on route numbered 24413, from Sault St. Marie, Mich., to Mackinac, Mich,, from July 1, 1875, to June 30, 1879, inclusive, he having contracted to carry United States mails only.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. I do not see the Senator present who made the report in this case. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, January 11, 1892, as follows:

A bill similar to this under consideration was introduced at the first session of the Fifty-first Congress and received a unanimously favorable report from this committee. That report is now adopted by your committee, and is as follows:

"This is a bill to reimburse Thomas Chambers, of Mackinac Island, Mich., for losses sustained by him as contractor on mail route No. 24413, from Mackinac to Sault St. Marie, Mich., for the four years ending June 30, 1879.

"In response to the invitation of the Post-Office Department, made in October, 1874, for bids for carrying the mail on this route, the claimant filed his proposal in conformity with the departmental instructions, and his bid of $1,675 was accepted. The contract was completed, and at the designated time he entered upon the service. In the course of events the weight of his mail matter was largely increased by foreign mail put up at Windsor, Canada, in through pouches, to be delivered on the border at Sault Ste. Marie, and it was incumbent upon the United States to transport this mail in pursuance of a postal arrangement concluded subsequent to the execution of the contract between this claimant and the Department. There was nothing in the invitation to bid nor in the contract itself contemplating this extra service.

"The Department avers that the claimant 'made oath that in bidding for the work he did so with full knowledge of the distance of the route, weight of mail to be carried, and all the particulars in reference to the route and and service.' He was obliged to do this under the form prescribed, nevertheless he did it with the full knowledge of the facts, knowledge derived from experience in carrying the mail over this same route as subcontractor or employé when there was but one pouch to carry, when its weight was light, and it could be transported with the use of dogs or one saddle horse.

"Again, the Department refers to certain stipulations contained in the contract as to 'celerity, certainty, and security, using therefor such means as may be necessary to transport the whole of said mail whatever may be its size, weight, or increase during the term of the contract.' These again are the usual and formal stipulations, but in enumerating them the Department concedes that the contract contained no clause relative to carrying foreign mail; that it was not until 1883 that such clauses were inserted in contracts. Plainly no such extra service was contemplated by either party to this contract, and especially by the party of the second part.

"This man made his bid in good faith. His practical experience convinced him that he could fulfill his obligation without loss to himself or injury to his bondsmen. His estimate was based upon the cost of employing one man and one horse to carry one pouch. He knew that there could be local increase. It came, but not by reason of any circumstance that he could have foreseen. It came in the form of foreign mail, not contemplated by the terms of the contract, as the Post-Office Department admits, and it tripled his service, his expenses, his responsibility.

"In the opinion of the committee this case does not involve a mere question of technicality. It is one of equity and justice. Even by the terms of the contract the Department did not hold an advantage whereby it could demand this extra service for which there was no adequate compensation.

"If the Department, as it is assumed, has not the power to reimburse this man it is the imperative duty of Congress to do it.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTH DAKOTA SCHOOL OF MINES.

The bill (S. 435) to aid the State of South Dakota to support a school of mines, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides the State of South Dakota shall annually receive 50 per cent of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within that State, for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Rapid City, in the county of Pennington, but the sum so to be paid shall not exceed $12,000 per annum, nor shall it exceed the amount annually expended by the State of South Dakota for this school of mines out of its treasury.

Before any money shall be paid to the State the Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the State of South Dakota is maintaining a school of mines at the place named in which students in attendance are given instruction in chemistry, metallurgy, mineralogy, geology, mining, mining engineering, mathematics, mechanics, and drawing, and that the students in attendance from other States are received into the school on the same terms and conditions that the students from the State of South Dakota are received.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 3, section 1, after the word "receive," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

That the State of South Dakota shall annually receive 25 per cent of all moneys paid to the United States for mineral lands within the State of South Dakota, for the maintenance of the school of mines established at Rapid City, in the county of Pennington, in said State, etc.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that the amendment offered by the committee be not agreed to. The bill, if the amendment is not agreed to, will be exactly in words and form the same as the bill which we passed a day or two ago for the school of mines in Colorado. The Colorado bill, as reported by the committee, provided that the State should receive 25 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, and the committee therefore amended the bill for South Dakota to correspond with that. The Senate afterwards changed the Colorado bill by amending it in the Senate so as to give to the State of Colorado 50 per cent of the gross proceeds. I therefore move that the amendment be not agreed to, so that the bill will put the South Dakota school of mines on the same footing as that of Colorado.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTH DAKOTA INSANE ASYLUM.

The bill (S. 444) granting to the State of South Dakota section No. 36, in township No. 94 north, of range No. 56 west, in the county of Yankton, in said State, for the purpose of an asylum for the insane, to correct an act approved June 16, 1880, attempting to make such grant to the Territory of Dakota, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like an explanation of what kind of a mistake it is which is proposed to be corrected. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. I see that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] reported it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In 1880 Congress passed an act granting to the Territory of Dakota section 36 in township 94, and the Territory of Dakota built an insane assylum upon this ground. It was afterwards discovered, although we had spent about $300,000 on the property, that the act had an error in the description, that the number of the range was given as the number of the township, and the town number was given as the range number. This bill is simply to correct that error.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY.

The bill (S. 143) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, and for the Southern University of Louisiana, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that that bill be passed over without losing its rights upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

ESCAMBIA MASONIC LODGE, PENSACOLA.

The bill (S. 81) to relinquish the interest of the United States in a certain parcel of land in the city of Pensacola, Fla., to Escambia Lodge, No. 15, Free and Accepted Masons, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The bill (S. 1549) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. What bill is that?

Mr. MANDERSON. This is the general printing bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not consider that bill in the morning hour. It will be simply a waste of time to attempt to do so, and I have no doubt there are a number of Senators who wish to examine it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to understand whether objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not making objection to its consideration, except that I am simply stating that the bill will necessarily lead to some discussion, and it is a very important measure—rather a long bill—accompanied with a very elaborate and full report made by the Senator from Nebraska. I have no doubt it will be the best thing for the passage of the bill to call the attention of Senators to it, and in a short explanation, which the Senator can make, to call attention to the report, and to what is set forth in the report, so that Senators may take it up and read it. They can not do that while the bill is being read; and then let the bill go over. It can not be considered now.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall be very glad to avail myself of the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri, for I think with him that the bill ought not to be considered during the morning hour because of its importance and the necessity for debate. It is of great length, and is a complete codification of the printing laws, making some very radical changes in methods and particularly in the modes of distribution, and before closing I will ask the Senate to set some time when the bill may become the special order of the Senate.

In order that the bill may be properly understood, I call attention to the fact that the report which was laid upon the desks of Senators yesterday contains very fully the action taken by the Committee on Printing under the order of the Senate. In that report will be found some two or three hundred pages of testimony embodied in full in it because of great value, having reference to the economical printing of the public documents of the country.

There will also be found in the report answers from all the heads of the Executive Departments to the circular prepared with care and addressed by the committee, which answers give in great detail the character and extent of the departmental printing, and attached to the report will be found a copy of this bill with each section annotated so as to show exactly the present law and any change proposed in the existing law, and presenting any new legislation and the reason for such legislation. I shall be glad to allow some little time to enable Senators to look over this report, particularly the annotated bill, believing that by that method very much time can be saved in its consideration.

Having thus called attention to these facts I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill may be made the special order for consideration at 2 o'clock on Thursday next.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator to fix a day a little further off. The report of the committee is a very voluminous one. I began to examine it last night, and I do not think anybody can examine it fully in the brief time named.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think if the Senator from Louisiana will look into that part of the report which contains the bill with the annotated sections, he will find that it will not take him a very great length of time to master the situation. I am very anxious to have the bill passed, because it is in the direction of proper economy in the public printing, and I have no question but that by the methods proposed in the bill we shall save an expenditure of from two hundred and fifty to three hundred thousand dollars annually. Not only that, but we shall inaugurate a system under which valuable documents will not only be printed but be thoroughly and evenly distributed throughout the country.

I should dislike to postpone the bill longer than Thursday, because I realize the fact that usually the Senate, in order that its committees may transact business during the interim, adjourns from Thursday or Friday over until the next Monday. I realize that if I was to place it later in the week than Thursday it would mean that it would have to go into next week and then conflict with many other matters upon the Calendar which are perhaps of equal importance with this bill.

Mr. WHITE. This bill has many sections in it and I do not suppose the Senator expects to pass the bill on Thursday.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am in hopes that we may be able to pass it on Thursday by taking it up at 2 o'clock and working vigorously on it. Still I should like to accommodate myself to the Senator from Louisiana if he particularly desires some other time, but I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill be made the special order for Thursday next, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. Would it not suit the Senator to name Monday instead? There are two very important bills under consideration now as unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT. This relates to a special order.

Mr. FRYE. The special order would displace them.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; the unfinished business goes on under the rule. The special order will be taken up at 2 o'clock on Thursday only in the event that the unfinished business is disposed of.

Mr. FRYE. One of the bills was made the unfinished business, and the other was not before the Senate; but yet, as it practically involves the same question that is before the Senate, it ought to follow immediately the consideration of this bill. I am not, however, going to object.

Mr. MANDERSON. At the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and after consultation with my colleague on the committee [Mr. HAWLEY], I will substitute Monday of next week, at 2 o'clock, and I ask that the bill may be made the special order for that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course the bill will retain its position on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

SITES FOR FORTIFICATIONS.

The bill (S. 1247) making an appropriation for the purchase of sites for fortifications was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. Let that bill and the next one following it on the Calendar go over for to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill the title of which has just been stated and the bill (S. 871) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses will be passed over, retaining their places on the Calendar, if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. What was that—a general objection which sends the bills to the other rule, or do they remain where they stand now?

Mr. BERRY. I objected to the bills. I have no objection to their retaining their places on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. Then let them go over without prejudice.

Mr. BERRY. These are two bills in regard to fortifications, and they are bills which I do not think can be disposed of in the morning hour. It is immaterial to me to which Calendar they may go; but I object to their coming up in the morning hour when there is not proper time for their consideration.

Mr. FRYE. As the Senator in charge of the bills is not present at the moment, let them go over without prejudice.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; let them retain their places on the Calendar, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] not being present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the Senate Chamber for a moment, and I should like to inquire what disposition was made of Order of Business 25, being the bill (S. 143) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, and for the Southern University of Louisiana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill went over without prejudice.

Mr. DOLPH. A new bill has been introduced and is under consideration by the Committee on Public Lands, and I think this bill may be re-referred to the Committee on Public Lands or be indefinitely postponed. It is, I think, a matter of indifference which course is pursued.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] was here at the time the bill was called up.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Louisiana has introduced an amended bill to take the place of the one on the Calendar, and he probably did not understand that this bill would remain upon the Calendar. Simply to get rid of it, I will ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] asked that the bill might go over without prejudice.

Mr. DOLPH. What was done with Order of Business 28, being Senate bill 1247?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What shall be done with Order of Business 25, to which the Senator has referred? The Senator from Louisiana asked that the bill might go over without prejudice, and he is not in his seat at this moment.

Mr. DOLPH. I presume there can be no objection to the bill for the purchase of sites for fortifications. If sent to the other House, the House can take its choice of passing an independent measure or providing an appropriation on the fortifications appropriation bill; or, if not, I am authorized when that bill comes into the Senate to report an amendment to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand what is now pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon is asking information as to what the action of the Senate was on Order of Business 25. The title of the bill will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 143) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, and for the Southern University of Louisiana.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood that was passed over without objection, at the instance of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], who reported it.

Mr. DOLPH. I stated that the Senator from Louisiana had introduced an amended bill, which is now before the Committee on Public Lands, and it will be acted upon soon. That committee does not desire this bill acted upon, and, in order that it might be got off the Calendar, I have asked that it be referred back to the Committee on Public Lands, and then, when the other bill is reported, this bill will probably be reported adversely and indefinitely postponed. This is to clear it from the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH. Order of Business 29, being the bill (S. 871) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, may go over under Rule IX as it can not be considered under Rule VIII, and I will give notice that as to Order of Business 28, being the bill (S. 1247) making an appropriation for the purchase of sites for fortifications, when the Calendar is again called during the morning hour I shall ask that that be disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of Order of Business 29 on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 871) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. DOLPH. That will go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX if there be no objection.

Mr. DOLPH subsequently said: I came in after the bill in relation to granting some public lands to the State of Louisiana had been passed over. Knowing that another bill had been introduced and referred to the committee, I thought it would relieve the record to have it re-referred, and I asked that that be done. I find that the Senator from Louisiana supposes that it is an advantage to him to have the bill already reported retain its place on the Calendar, so I will ask to have the order that was made at my request reconsidered and the bill retained on the Calendar instead of being recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be restored to the place it occupied?

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be restored to the place it held on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Without objection the vote recommitting the bill will be regarded as reconsidered, and the bill restored to its place on the Calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAMPA, FLA.

The bill (S. 79) for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in section 2, line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and forty;" so as to read:

That no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum of $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WATERBURY, CONN.

The bill (S. 237) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HASTINGS, NEBR.

The bill (S. 1054) to provide for the construction of a public building at Hastings, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of that bill. I discover that a number of these bills are reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds without any printed report and we have no means of gaining any information in regard to them. I should like to know something about the size of this city, whether there is any United States court held there, and what kind of governmental business necessitates the erection of a public building there?

Mr. PADDOCK. This is a reintroduction of a bill which passed at the last Congress, and which had before passed in the two preceding Congresses. Hastings is in the third class of the towns in our State. Indeed, there is only one other besides Hastings in this class in respect of population, business importance, railroads, manufactures, public institutions, and enterprise. It is a court town. Two terms of the United States court are held there regularly in each year, and no suitable place has been or can be provided without the construction of this building for the holding of the same. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury has reported that this amount is within the required limit; that not less than this amount should be appropriated; that no building such as seems to be demanded can be erected for less than the amount named.

Mr. PLATT. What is the amount?

Mr. PADDOCK. It is $250,000. Hastings is a court town, where the business of a very large section of our State, the western part of the State, will have to be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is a United States court held there?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes; the United States court is regularly held there. An act providing for terms of court there was passed by Congress two or three years since. Hastings has a population of 15,000. It is the metropolis of the western half of our State south of the Platte River. No more meritorious public building bill has been or will be passed by this Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT DETROIT, MICH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 297) to increase the accommodations at the marine hospital at Detroit, Mich.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see that there is already a marine hospital building there, and as the Senator who introduced and reported the bill is present, I should like to hear some explanation for the necessity of this additional expenditure there.

Mr. McMILLAN. The building already there was erected some twenty-five years ago, and, as everybody knows, the tonnage on the lakes has increased very much, and the number of men employed on the lakes is four or five times as great as it was at the time the hospital was built. In the four years from 1886 to 1890 the tonnage of the Great Lakes increased from 634,652 to 826,360; and the estimated value of the vessels from $30,597,450 to $58,128,500, nearly doubling in that time. The hospital accommodations are now very inadequate. The erection of this building is recommended by the Surgeon-General and by the medical officers in charge there. It is very much needed, and I hope the bill will not be objected to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MANSFIELD, OHIO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 303) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Mansfield, Ohio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know something about the population of the city of Mansfield, whether there are any courts held there, the amount of business that is done, and some reason why the Government should go to the expense of erecting a public building there. I think this is a matter of justice. There are hundreds of towns and cities in the United States that are clamoring for the erection of public buildings, and when no explanation is given, they do not know why they are not just as much entitled to them as the places named in these bills. It is not the inhabitants of every town and city in the United States who have a familiar knowledge of the statistics, population, etc, of every other town and they think that it is a discrimination in favor of certain places. I should like to know why it is that a public building is needed at this place.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this same bill was passed at the last session of the Senate after a very full statement had been made in the nature of a report of all the facts and circumstances for which the Senator now calls. I am sorry that I have not the statement here before me, but I will assure the Senator that Mansfield is one of the leading manufacturing towns of the State, and I can say that from my own personal knowledge, because I live there.

Mr. COCKRELL. About what is the population?

Mr. SHERMAN. About 16,000. It is a city with a very large number of leading manufacturing establishments; for instance, Mr. HARTER, a member of the House, is a very extensive manufacturer of thrashing machines, and there are a great many other establishments involving a large amount of capital, going into the millions. The postal receipts are abnormally large in that town for the reason that it has a manufacturing population. Such receipts amount to something over $30,000 a year. The precise figures I can not now give. Mansfield is surrounded by a rich, productive country and is the junction of several important railroads. There is a United States revenue officer there, and it is one of those places where Congress, by general law, should provide for the construction of a public building.

I am not in favor of extravagance in these buildings. I think a building of the character provided by this bill, costing not to exceed, including the value of the land, about $100,000, is sufficient for the purpose. I think it would be good economy for the Government of the United States to build such buildings. The rent and other expenses paid for a building there suitable for the postal service would be fully equal to the interest on $100,000, according to the rate of interest the Government would have to pay for money.

I think it is economy in the long run for the Government gradually, not too rapidly, but from time to time, to provide buildings in cities like Mansfield and Zanesville. There are but two towns, I will say, provided for by bills on the Calendar in the State of Ohio, and the aggregate amount of appropriation is $200,000 in this bill and one other bill that has been reported. I think a discrimination is made against the State of Ohio in favor of the Western and Southern towns. Many towns with less than half the population of Mansfield have now Government buildings in the Southern and Western States. It is assumed that those cities will grow more rapidly than cities in Ohio, although that does not follow.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9) to define and punish blackmailing;

A bill (H. R. 435) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 504) in relation to the western judicial district of Wisconsin.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 123) fixing the times for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States in the northern district of Iowa; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NORFOLK, NEBR.

The bill (S. 197) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Norfolk, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before the bill is read, I wish to suggest that Norfolk is the largest town outside of the city of Omaha in all that part of the State of Nebraska which is north of the Platte River, a section of country, in round numbers, about 150 miles in width by 500 miles in length. Recognizing the great importance to parties litigant that a United States court should be established in this vast territory, Congress several years ago made Norfolk one of the court towns of Nebraska. The courts have been held there since the passage of that bill with very great convenience and saving an unnecessary amount of expense to the Government.

This town is a very thriving one. Its population now, I think, is about 15,000, but it is growing with that rapidity which characterizes towns in that section of the West. There is located there one of the two large sugar-beet factories that this year turned out an enormous product of beet sugar, and under the legislation of Congress there are the proper officers of the revenue established there. This town is of the same character in the northern part of Nebraska that the town of Hastings, referred to by my colleague, is in the southwestern part of that State, and the two buildings should be of the same character.

I have here a bill that has met the approval of the committee, which is in the exact terms of the Hastings bill, that I offer as a substitute for the bill under consideration, making the legislation conform to that for the town of Hastings.

I may say further, with reference to these two buildings, which are to contain not only post-office facilities, but also the court room, with its necessary adjuncts, with jury rooms, etc., that the amount mentioned in each case, $250,000, is declared to be needed by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. I think experience has shown that no building containing these needed offices for the post-office and for the maintenance of the courts can be built with credit to the Government and with proper economy for less money.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is appropriated by the substitute?

Mr. MANDERSON. The same amount as was appropriated by the Hastings bill, $250,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that amount recommended by the Supervising Architect?

Mr. MANDERSON. The Supervising Architect says that is the amount which he thinks will be needed for this purpose in each of these towns.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Norfolk and State of Nebraska, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $250,000, which said sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioner, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof, shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Nebraska shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for and the sketch plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, ILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 94) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Jacksonville, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see there is no report with the bill, and I should like to know some reason why a public building should be erected there. I should also like to be informed as to the population of the place, whether any courts are held there, what United States officers are there, etc.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I suppose the reason why there is no report accompanying the bill is the same that was assigned by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in the Mansfield case. This bill or a similar one to it was passed through the Senate by the last Congress. At the time of the passage of the bill there was a pretty full report, setting forth the facts in relation to the situation of the town.

The fact is that there is no Government building there, no court, but the city of Jacksonville is one of the old towns of our State.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the population?

Mr. CULLOM. The population surrounding it is more dense than that which surrounds any other town in the State. The population of the city itself, my recollection is, according to the census of 1890, was something between fourteen and fifteen thousand inhabitants. I do not remember exactly the census report on that subject, but I am satisfied it is between those two figures.

The city contains within it several colleges, the Illinois College, for instance, one of the oldest educational institutions of the State, several other seminaries and institutions of learning, and, in addition to that, three State institutions, such as an insane asylum, a blind asylum, a deaf and dumb asylum, etc. The city of Jacksonville is one of the noted cities of the State, and probably has a greater reputation as an educational city than any other city in the State.

A year ago, when the bill was passed by the Senate, I had all the facts in relation to the receipts and other information in regard to the post-office itself. I have not them with me now, because I supposed, in view of the fact that the bill had passed before, that there would be no objection when it came up during the present session. I hope the bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know that it is an absolutely conclusive reason that the Senate should pass a bill now simply because it was passed at the last Congress, and I do not know whether the fact that it passed the Senate in the last Congress will be alone sufficient to carry it through some other legislative body that may be in existence some time or other. I have no doubt that the report is just as the Senator says. It would not have been a very difficult or laborious work for a reference to have been made in a very brief report to the former report, so that we could all have obtained the report and looked at it for ourselves. There are some twelve, fifteen or twenty bills that I reported at the last session, some of them very voluminous reports, and I simply make a reference to the facts and the record in the case to be found in a certain report that was made in the last Congress, and any Senator can get it and see it. But these bills came to us without any facts accompanying them, or any indication of a place where we can get the information.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senate is familiar with the fact that the Senator from Missouri is more particular in making his reports on bills than most other Senators. I have no doubt that what the Senator says is true, that in his reports he makes reference to former reports. I was not myself upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and hence not knowing what came with the bill, supposing that as it had passed before there would be no objection to it, I did not arm myself with the facts. Otherwise I should have presented them. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FERGUS FALLS, MINN.

The bill (S. 339) for the erection of a public building at Fergus Falls, Minn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NASHUA, N. H.

The bill (S. 367) to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the necessity for this public building. I do not see that the bill says anything about United States courts there. I should like to know something about the number of inhabitants in the city of Nashua and the necessity for this public building.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill I think has passed the Senate twice before. An elaborate report was made in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses. I have in my hand a report made upon the bill by the committee of the other House in the last Congress, from which I will quote some data.

This report represents that Nashua is the gate city of New Hampshire, having a population of 18,000. I will state that it has a larger population than that now, the report having been made two years ago. It is a railroad center of the first rank in our State, there being six or seven railroads centering in it. It is the second city in population in New Hampshire.

The industries of Nashua are the most varied of any city in our State. They include cotton, iron, steel, soapstone, boots and shoes, machinery, engines, boilers, lathes, presses, glazed paper, cardboard, edged tools, boxes, shovels, and lumber in all of its varieties. The industries of Nashua employ 4,000 persons. The aggregate capital employed is $3,000,000, and the value of the products is $2,000,000 annually, paying in wages the vast sum of $1,000,000.

I will state, furthermore, concerning Nashua, that it is a city of twelve churches, two daily and several weekly newspapers, with a very large public library, and everything that goes to make up a progressive city.

Concerning the postal receipts of Nashua, which are, after all, the most important in a matter of this kind, I have not the data for the past year at hand; but two years ago the postal receipts exceeded $20,000 a year, the expenditures being $12,000, leaving a balance to the Government of $8,000.

In response to the interrogatory of the Senator from Missouri I will state that there is not any United States court held in the city of Nashua. The presumption is that the building erected (and it ought to be erected, because the present accommodations are totally inadequate and exposed to fire every hour of the day) will be mainly for post-office purposes. Very likely a deputy internal-revenue collector and possibly certain other minor officers of the Government will have quarters there, but for the present, at least, there will not be United States courts held there.

I feel sure that the bill will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate, and I trust that it will be passed without any controversy or opposition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

The bill (S. 304) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Zanesville, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill. I see there is no report with it, but there may have been a report at some time or other. I hardly think any one Senator will have the opportunity to hunt up every report that has been made from every committee of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the bill stand over without prejudice. Neither of the Ohio Senators is in his seat.

Mr. SHERMAN entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is now present.

Mr. VEST. I can state in regard to the bill that it went to the Supervising Architect and was reported regularly and considered by the committee and passed by the Senate in the last Congress. It is one of the bills which passed the Senate at the last session, but it did not succeed in getting through the other House. It went through all the regular stages of recommendation and examination. I do not recollect the amount appropriated, but I know that I thought the bill was right at the time, and I have never had any reason to change my opinion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can say of Zanesville that it is one of the most flourishing towns of our State. We have only five or six public buildings in the State. It is a city of the higher rank and contains about 20,000 inhabitants. It is a very flourishing town, on the Muskingum River, and is one of the leading towns in the State.

I have no doubt that, as a matter of economy, Zanesville should have a public building. It is one of the places that I think would naturally be selected for that purpose. I think we have six cities in Ohio that are already provided with public buildings or will be. Mansfield and Zanesville are the only two cities in the list that it is now proposed to provide with public buildings, and I think they are both deserving and important.

As I said a moment ago when I was speaking on the Mansfield bill, I think a general law ought to be passed that where the receipts of a post-office equal $30,000 a year a public building ought to be erected there, and it is really economy to do so in this case, for I have no doubt in the city of Zanesville the cost of renting the buildings, etc., and other necessary expenses amount to at least $2,000 a year, and the interest on the entire cost of this public building will be only $3,000 a year. I believe the building is to cost $100,000. I do not now remember exactly the amount.

Mr. COCKRELL. One hundred thousand dollars is the amount appropriated by the present bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I thought. I think it a wise thing to erect a public building there. As I said before, there have been dozens and dozens of public buildings provided for in many of the States where the population is not one-half and the business is not one-third what it is in the city of Zanesville.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a vote on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the business now in order may be laid aside informally, that a vote may be had on the pending bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment as in Committee of the Whole it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

DRY DOCK ON GULF OF MEXICO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by the report of the Commission appointed by me by virtue of a provision in the naval appropriation act approved June 30, 1890, "to select a suitable site, having due regard to commercial and naval interests, for a dry dock at some point on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connected therewith."

The Secretary of the Navy approves the recommendations of the Commission, and they are respectfully submitted for the consideration of Congress.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 19, 1892.

NOTE: The report of the Commission, etc., accompany this message to the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 9) to define and punish blackmailing;

A bill (H. R. 435) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 504) in relation to the western judicial district of Wisconsin.

MEXICAN COMMISSION AWARDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 539) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to hasten through what I have to say in regard to the pending bill. I feel like stating to the Senate that no one will be so much rejoiced at the termination of what I consider my duty in the matter as myself. No one who has not examined the papers in this case has any idea of the almost infinite amount of actual toil that is involved in examining a case in which for sixteen years the débris of matter has been piled up from both Houses of Congress and from the Department of State.

I repeat, Mr. President, what I stated npou yesterday, that nothing would induce me to participate in this debate at all but the fact that in the State of Missouri there are a number of the descendants of the claimants of this award who appealed to me as their representative in the Senate to present what they believed to be an honest and just claim. Whatever amount of fraud may be charged against the men originally engaged in this matter, nothing can be said against the women and children and trustees who, by inheritance and assignment, now hold portions of the award. Of course I do not propose to appeal to sentiment, although some sentiment would be cheerful amongst so much drudgery. If Senators would take pains to look at these papers they will find among them a letter from a widow lady in Pennsylvania stating that the bread absolutely necessary for subsistence for herself and daughter is dependent upon the decision of Congress in regard to the portion of this award that comes to her and to her child. Ungrateful as the task is, I shall discharge it to the best of my ability.

Before proceeding to the discussion of the argument upon the evidence, which I shall make as brief as possible out of consideration to the Senate and to myself, I wish to state what may have been misapprehended yesterday when I replied to an interruption by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I was alluding to the terms of the pending bill as to the submission of this case to the Court of Claims, and I criticised the language of the bill when it provided that if the Court of Claims should find that there was any fraud or false swearing then the President of the United States was authorized to pay back to the Government of Mexico the entire amount now in the Department of State growing out of the La Abra claim. I said then that in my judgment the words "false swearing" ought to be "perjury."

The Senator from Mississippi was disposed to criticise my statement because he said a new trial would be granted by a judge for false swearing, which did not constitute perjury in a judicial proceeding. As a matter of course that is elementary law, known to every student of law; but what I wish to reply to, if I did not make him and other Senators who happened to listen sufficiently aware of my purpose, was this: I understand it to be disclaimed by Mexico that this is an application for a new trial. Mexico does not institute these proceedings at all. This is a proceeding sui generis by the Government of the United States to investigate one simple fact, and that is whether the name of the Government and its nationality have been used to cover up a deliberate fraud by citizens of the United States upon a friendly power. In all the annals of jurisprudence no such proceeding as this can be found, I undertake to say, where the Government through its legislative department undertakes to inquire through a municipal court into the action of the political department of the Government.

Therefore I said that the phrase ought to be "perjury," because the very preamble of the bill says it is a question of national honor. It is not a question of meum et tuum, as would be involved in a motion for a new trial before an ordinary judicial tribunal. The preamble of the bill says:

Whereas the Secretary of State, after investigating the charge of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the case of La Abra Silver Mining Company, has heretofore reported that the "honor of the United States requires" that said case "should be further investigated by the United States, to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing upon a friendly power claims of our citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud."

Therefore, I submit that mere false swearing, which might be simply a mistake of an honest witness, would not be sufficient for the finding of this court under the terms of the bill. It should involve the question of deliberate fraud, of perjury, of a stain upon the name of the United States, involved in the fact that its citizens were permitted to use the national character in order to deliberately perpetrate fraud upon a friendly government. That is my meaning. Afterwards, without unnecessary terms, I propose to discuss at last the great question in this case. I may not secure the attention of the Senate; I hardly hope to do so. My own interest in this matter is flagging through the lapse of years; the statute of limitations has nearly run against all interest I had in it; but the great question underlying it and worthy the attention of every Senator, for a greater question could not come before this body, is whether Congress in the passage of this bill does not invade the political domain assigned by constitutional limitation to the Chief Executive alone. That is a question after all of more importance, because it is not a question of dollars and cents; it is a question of constitutional construction.

As I said before, this case is sui generis, standing by itself without precedent. When a mandamus was applied for by Key against the Secretary of State to enforce by judicial decision the distribution of this money, Chief Justice Waite said it is not a question to be governed by ordinary rules of pleading such as would govern a motion for a new trial, but he said it is a peculiar proceeding, in which Congress is asked by one of the Departments of the Government to furnish the means to enable that Department to ascertain the duty of the United States in the premises. There is not one word in the decision of Frelinghuysen vs. Key—I modestly take issue with the distinguished Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to it—there is not one word in that decision which says that Congress has the right through one of its own municipal tribunals to settle this question with Mexico. It is a question, as I construe that decision, to be settled by the Chief Executive managing the political relations of this country under the Constitution in conjunction with the Senate of the United States when a treaty is submitted by the President to the Senate for its constitutional sanction by a vote of two-thirds.

Hereafter I propose briefly to give the authorities that I think conclusively settle the question as to whether this is a municipal or legal question, one to be submitted to a municipal tribunal for adjudication and process in the way of enforcing its judgment, or whether it is a question to be submitted exclusively to the President of the United States. That such was the opinion is evident from the fact that President Arthur sent this case in the shape of a treaty to the Senate. The proposition made now to go to the Court of Claims is an afterthought growing out of the fact that the Senate refused to approve that treaty.

Mexico then had only one resort. Mexico had applied to the Senate before to send this case to the Court of Claims. That bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with Allen G. Thurman as its chairman, and in the personnel of membership were Roscoe Conkling, Joseph E. McDonald, Matt Carpenter, and others, the most distinguished lawyers of the Senate and of the country; and the committee, after considering the identical question of which I now speak, as to whether we had the power to send this case to a municipal tribunal, the Court of Claims, reported unanimously that no such power existed, but it was simply under the exercise of the political power of the Government that this thing could be determined.

While upon that question I will ask that the report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, No. 712, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, be printed in the RECORD. "The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1682) entitled 'An act directing the Court of Claims to investigate the claims of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company,' make the following report," in which report they discuss the entire question as to the power of Congress to send this case to the Court of Claims and come to the conclusion that no such power exists. Without reading the report, to which I refer Senators, and about the conclusions of which there can be no discussion, for it speaks for itself, I ask that the report be made a portion of my remarks in this case, without exhausting my own strength or the patience of the Senate.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Forty-sixth Congress, second session. Senate Report No. 712.]

In the Senate of the United States.

June 10, 1880.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDonald, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 1682):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1682) entitled "An act directing the Court of Claims to investigate the claims of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company," make the following report:

The fifth section of the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th of July, 1868," is as follows:

"SEC. 5. And whereas the Government of Mexico has called the attention of the Government of the United States to the claims hereinafter named with a view to a rehearing; therefore, be it enacted that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate any charges of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the cases hereinafter named, and if he shall be of the opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or considerations of justice and equity require that the awards in the cases of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company, or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried, it shall be lawful for him to withhold payment of said awards, or either of them, until such case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress shall otherwise direct; and, in case of such retrial and decision, any moneys paid or to be paid by the Republic of Mexico in respect of said awards, respectively, shall be held to abide the event, and shall be disposed of accordingly; and the said present awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed, as may be determined on such retrial: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an expression of any opinion of Congress in respect to the character of said claims, or either of them."

In adding this section to the act providing for the distribution of the awards, it was not the purpose of Congress to pass upon the character of the claims referred to in it, as the proviso attached to said section expressly declares. By authorizing the installments payable to these claimants under the treaty to be withheld in the discretion of the President, if, upon investigation of the charges of fraud presented by the Mexican Government against such claims, "he should be of opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law or considerations of justice and equity, required that the awards in these cases, or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried," it was intended, so far as legislative authority might be requisite, to release the executive department from the absolute obligations of the award, and to authorize such examination by the executive department into the complaints of the Mexican Government as would enable the President to pass upon the questions raised by them; and if "the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or considerations of justice and equity," required a retrial of these cases, or either of them, then and in that case to initiate with the Mexican Government such convention or stipulations as would provide for the retrial under such regulations as would secure the ends of justice and vindicate the honor of the United States.

It appears from the message of the President of the United States of April 15, 1880, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, to whom the matter embraced in the section above quoted was referred, that no definite conclusions had been arrived at by the executive department upon the questions involved in said section. That report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE. Washington, April 13, 1880.

To the PRESIDENT:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the following resolution of the Senate of the 27th of February, 1880—

"Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not inconsistent with the public service, to inform the Senate what action, if any, has been taken by him under authority of section 5 of the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled 'An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868,' and of the grounds of such action, and what further action, if any, the honor of the United States may, in his opinion, require to be taken in the premises"—has the honor to report.

The act passed by Congress "to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," contained the following section:

"SEC. 5. And whereas the Government of Mexico has called the attention of the Government of the United States to the claims hereinafter named with a view to a rehearing; therefore, be it enacted that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate any charges of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the cases hereinafter named, and if he shall be of the opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or considerations of justice and equity require that the awards in the cases of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company, or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried, it shall be lawful for him to withhold payment of said awards, or either of them, until such case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress shall otherwise direct; and, in case of such retrial and decision, any moneys paid or to be paid by the Republic of Mexico in respect of said awards, respectively, shall be held to abide the event, and shall be disposed of accordingly; and the said present awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed, as may be determined on such retrial: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an expression of any opinion of Congress in respect to the character of said claims, or either of them."

It having been referred by you to the Department of State to institute the investigation required by this action, I gave the subject the most careful examination. I reviewed the proceedings of the commission, including the testimony originally submitted, the arguments made the counsel both for the Republic of Mexico and the United States, the opinions of the members of the commission, and the final decision of the umpire. I considered the representations of the Mexican Government, as set forth in its diplomatic communications to this Department, and subjected to patient scrutiny the supplemental evidence by which those representations had been supported. In addition to this, I heard counsel both for the Mexican Government and the parties interested in these awards.

The most impressive complaint of the Mexican Government in the La Abra case bore upon the award of damages as fraudulently exaggerated.

In the Weil case, the Government of Mexico asserts that no such case had ever had any real existence; that there never was any such property as is alleged to have been seized; that the parties claimant never owned, directly or as agents, any such property; that the seizure of the property is in all its details a pure fiction, and that the evidence by which the whole claim is established is spurious and corrupt.

Upon these complaints, and the examination given to them as above set forth, on the 8th of August last I reported to you my conclusions as to the proper disposition of the matter by the executive government, as follows:

"First. I am of opinion that, as between the United States and Mexico, the latter Government has no right to complain of the conduct of these claims before the tribunal of commissioners and umpire provided by the convention, or of the judgments given thereupon, so far as the integrity of the tribunal is concerned, the regularity of the proceedings, the full opportunity, in time and after notice, to meet the case of the respective claimants, and the free and deliberate choice exercised by Mexico as to the methods, the measure, and the means of the defense against the same.

"I conclude, therefore, that neither the principles of public law nor considerations of justice or equity require or permit, as between the United States and Mexico, that the awards in these cases should be opened and the cases retried before a new international tribunal, or under any new convention or negotiation respecting the same between the United States and Mexico.

"Second, I am, however, of opinion that the matters brought to the attention of this Government on the part of Mexico do bring into grave doubt the substantial integrity of the claim of Benjamin Weil and the sincerity of the evidence as to the measure of damages insisted upon and accorded in the case of the La Abra Silver Mining Company, and that the honor of the United States does require that these two cases should be further investigated by the United States, to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing against a friendly power claims of our citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud.

"If such further investigation should remove the doubts which have been fairly raised upon the representations of Mexico, the honor of the United States will have been completely maintained. If, on the other hand, the claimants shall fail in removing these doubts, or they should be replaced by certain condemnation, the honor of the United States will be vindicated by such measures as may then be dictated.

"Third. The executive government is not furnished with the means of instituting and pursuing methods of investigation which can coerce the production of evidence or compel the examination of parties and witnesses. The authority for such an investigation must proceed from Congress. I would advise, therefore, that the proofs and the conclusions you shall come to thereon, if adverse to the immediate payment on these awards of the installments received from Mexico, be laid before Congress for the exercise of their plenary authority in the matter.

"Fourth. It may be that, as the main imputation in the case of the La Abra Silver Mining Company is of fraudulent exaggeration of the claim in its measure of damages, it may consist with a proper reservation of further investigation in this case to make the distribution of the installments in hand.

"I have this subordinate consideration still under examination, and, should you entertain this distinction, will submit my further conclusions on this point."

These conclusions having been approved by you, and the point reserved for further consideration in the La Abra case having again been referred to me, on the 3d of September last I reported to you my conclusions upon the same, as follows:

"The parties interested in the case of the La Abra Mining Company having desired from you a further consideration of the point reserved in my former statement to you of my views in that case, and the matter having been referred to me to that end, I respectfully submit my conclusion on that point.

"1. Upon a renewed examination of the matter as laid before me by the Mexican Government, I am confirmed in the opinion that the proper limits of the further consideration which the honor of the Government should prompt it to give to this award should confine the investigation to the question of a fraudulent exaggeration of the claim by the parties before the commission to which, under the provision of the convention, it was presented by this Government.

"2. Upon a careful estimate as to any probable or just reduction of the claim from further investigation, should Congress institute it, and under a sense of the obligation of the executive government to avoid any present deprivation of right which does not seem necessary to ultimate results, I am of opinion that its distributive share of the installments thus far received from Mexico may properly be paid to the claimant, reserving the question as to later installments.

"If this conclusion should receive your approval, the payment can be made upon the verification at the Department of State of the rightful parties to receive it."

This latter conclusion having also received your approval, and the results stated in both these reports having been communicated both to the Mexican Government and the claimants, the payment was made upon the La Abra award of the distributive share of the installments then in hand, and payment was withheld of the distributive share of such installments upon the Weil award.

The parties interested in these awards have from time to time preferred requests for a renewed consideration by the Executive of the questions arising for his determination under the act of Congress of June 18, 1878, and have particularly insisted that, in deciding against opening these awards diplomatically and reëxamining them by a new international commission, the whole discretion vested in the Executive as a part of the treaty-making power and under the special provision of the act of Congress was exhausted, and that the payments should be no longer suspended in respect to these cases or either of them. A solicitous attention to the rights of the claimants and the duty of the Executive in the premises has confirmed me in the opinion that Congress should determine whether the "honor of the United States" requires any further investigation in these cases or either of them, and provide the efficient means of such further investigation, if thought necessary.

In the conclusions to which I came, and which I had the honor to submit to your examination, I was principally governed by the following considerations:

1. In the complaints of the Mexican Government there is not the slightest impeachment, express or implied, of the character or composition of the commission, of its methods of procedure, or of the entire regularity and integrity of its actual proceedings. It was composed of able and eminent men, enjoying the full confidence of the Governments by whom they were respectively appointed, and the umpire selected, Sir Edward Thornton, was preëminently fitted for his laborious and responsible duties by his long diplomatic experience, his recognized ability, his high character, and his special knowledge of the two countries whose citizens and Governments were interested in the arbitration.

2. Before this Commission the Government of Mexico had full opportunity and ample time to present its defense, both in evidence and argument, against any claim that was submitted. In the La Abra case a large amount of testimony was taken on both sides, the comparison and valuation of which was within the power of the Commission, and the opinion of the umpire shows that it was carefully considered.

In the Weil case it is true that the Mexican Government submitted no testimony, and that the case was decided upon the evidence offered by the claimants. But the Mexican commissioner explicitly declined the offer of further time to produce such testimony, although he professed that his Government had such in possession, saying upon the trial:

"There is in the present case the still more serious consideration that there is sufficient evidence upon which to judge of the claim, and that by opening the door to new testimony it would only serve to show the claimant wherein the edifice which he had erected upon his imagination was weak, and by enlightening him how to crown his intrigue by new efforts, which, although they would not change the aspect of the case, might lead him to confirm it."

3. The treaty under the provisions of which the Commission was appointed was explicit in recognition of the finality of its action. By Article II of that convention, the two Governments bound themselves to consider the decisions of the commissioners and of the umpire as absolutely final and conclusive, and to give full effect to such decisions without any objection, evasion, or delay whatsoever; and, by the fifth article, the high contracting parties agree to consider the result of the proceedings of the Commission as a full, perfect, and final settlement of every claim upon either government arising from the transactions prior to the exchange of ratifications thereof.

4. Aside from this special provision of the finality of the decision of the Commission, in the very act of its creation, it would seem impossible to review and retry any individual case without opening the door to other reclamations of the same sort. In addition to these cases, with the result of which the Mexican Government is dissatisfied, there are many others which failed of preparation in time, which were rejected on principles not always acquiesced in by those interested, and some in which the claimants deemed the awards very insufficient. The adherence of the Government of the United States to the strict letter of its convention, that the decision of the commissioners should be absolutely final in every case and a complete bar to any claim arising from transactions prior to its ratification, has hitherto prevented any effort on the part of this Government to renew such discussion in favor of its citizens. But if it be once admitted that for any reason short of an impeachment of the integrity of the Commission its proceedings can be reopened for review and its decisions for reversal, there will not be wanting numerous urgent appeals to the justice and sympathy of the Government to extend this measure of relief to many who think that their claims have been erroneously estimated or rejected.

Lastly, the principle of the settlement of international differences by arbitral commissions is of such deep and wide-reaching interest to civilization, and the value of such arbitration depends so essentially upon the certainty and finality of its decision, that no government should lightly weaken its influence or diminish its consideration by making its action the subject of renewed discussion. It is only in extreme cases, where the Commission is itself charged with corruption or where it has clearly exceeded its powers in deciding matters not submitted to its judgment, that prompt and cheerful acquiescence should not be rendered to its action. No such charge is here suggested. It may be true that in this or that instance more adequate justice might have been rendered. The methods and processes of such tribunals, which in time it may be confidently hoped will be improved and perfected, are not yet so complete as to eliminate much opportunity of error.

But the results of such an arbitration, covering, as this did, large, complicated, and numerous transactions, deciding not upon oral testimony winnowed by cross-examination, but upon the contradiction of vague affidavits, can not be fairly judged by the apparent errors of this or that individual case. There is probably no just ground for saying that the aggregate of the awards against Mexico more than equaled the just claims of our citizens, and much complaint has been made that such aggregate falls quite short of them. But the awards made by this Commission were something more than the settlement of mere private claims. It was the adjustment of long-standing national differences. And if in the result more or less was added to or taken from particular awards, still, if on the whole a fair and just balance has been struck; if, considering all that has been given and all that has been refused, the examination has been careful and the judgment impartial, it is the interest and the duty of governments to maintain it.

While these considerations led to the conclusion that these cases ought not to be made the subject of a new international commission, I was yet of opinion that "the honor of the United States" was concerned to inquire whether in these cases, submitted by this Government to the Commission, its confidence had been seriously abused, and the Government of Mexico, acting in good faith in accepting a friendly arbitration, had been subjected to heavy pecuniary imposition by fraud and perjury in the maintenance of these claims, or either of them, before the Commission. In furtherance, however, of this opinion, it seemed to me apparent that the Executive discretion under the act of Congress could extend no further than to withhold further payments on the awards until Congress should, by its plenary authority, decide whether such an investigation should be made, and should provide an adequate procedure for its conduct, and prescribe the consequences which should follow from its results.

Unless Congress should now make this disposition of the matter, and furnish thereby definite instructions to the Department to reserve further payments upon these awards till the conclusion of such investigation, and to take such further order with the same thereafter as Congress might direct, it would appear to be the duty of the Executive to accept these awards as no longer open to reconsideration, and proceed in the payment of the same pro rata with all other awards under the convention.

WM. M. EVARTS.

It will be seen from this report, with respect to La Abra mining claim, the principal ground of complaint is exaggeration of damages, and upon that question it does not appear that any fault whatever attaches to the Commission before whom it was examined, nor to the referee by whom it was affirmed. It also appears that the Department of State so far passed upon the question of excessive damages as to determine the claimants to be entitled to the installments already paid in, and that the Executive had directed the amounts to which the claimants were thus entitled to be paid over; and while the remaining installments not yet received may be regarded as subject to retention to meet the question of a reduction of damages, it virtually determines the question submitted to the Executive Department by the said 5th section, so far as that claim is concerned.

In regard to the Weil claim, the case presents one of greater difficulty. It appears from the report of the Secretary that this claim is charged by the Mexican Government to be a complete fabrication; that this charge was made before the Commissioners at the time it was undergoing investigation. The representative of Mexico claimed to be in possession of evidence then to establish the charge, but declined to introduce it, preferring to rest the case on the evidence introduced by the claimant, but sought afterwards to introduce such impeaching testimony before Sir Edward Thornton, the referee, who declined to receive it, holding, and correctly, that no new evidence could be introduced on the hearing before him, and that upon the evidence submitted to the commissioners he could not do otherwise than to affirm the claim.

In the investigation that has taken place in the State Department, under the authority of the fifth section quoted above, no suggestion appears in the report of the Secretary "that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law, or the considerations of justice and equity require that this case should be retried," but, on the contrary, after stating considerations of public policy which would seem to forbid the reopening of the case, the questions of honor, principles of public law, and considerations of justice and equity are referred to Congress to decide. This would involve an investigation by Congress of facts of an international character which, in the opinion of the committee, properly belongs to the executive department, and which it was the intention of the fifth section of the act of June 18, 1878, to leave with the department.

The bill under consideration proposes to withdraw these two claims from the dominion of international jurisdiction and place them before a tribunal organized and existing solely by virtue of the laws of this country, and in this way it would seem designed to avoid the opening up of other questions of complaint that are known to exist on behalf of citizens of the United States whose claims, for various causes, fail to receive favorable consideration by said commission under the treaty creating the commission.

The second article of that treaty bound the two governments absolutely and conclusively by the final awards of the commission and umpire in all cases coming within its provisions; and it would seem right that if it is to be set aside as to any of the claims it ought to be by a new convention, in which provision should be made for doing justice to all claimants.

The reasoning of the Secretary of State against the propriety of such a course as this would seem to be unsatisfactory; but, in the aspect these cases are presented to us, we feel constrained to report back said bill adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement.

Mr. VEST. Not satisfied with that appeal in the Forty-sixth Congress, Mexico went to the House of Representatives and there made the same proposition through a resolution, and it was there elaborately discussed. I hold in my hand now the report of Mr. Wilson, Report No. 27, in the Forty-fifth Congress, second session, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 30 (a, p. 8), in relation to suspending payment of the claims of Benjamin Weil, No. 447, and the La Abra Silver Mining Company, No. 489, on the American docket of the late joint commission of the United States and Mexico, and also a letter from Mr. Secretary Evarts in relation to the same subject (b, p. 8), having had the matter under consideration, submit the following report.

In that report, after examining the entire question, the committee unanimously report that no such power exists to send these awards to the Court of Claims. The language of the committee is as follows:

> Auxiliary legislation may become necessary to the complete execution of a treaty, and to that extent it is competent for Congress to legislate upon the subject. (Lawrence's Wheaton on International Law, p. 457.)
> In the case now under consideration the Secretary of State has asked for auxiliary legislation, in this, an act appropriating the amount of money that was withheld from citizens of the United States by Mexico to pay the amount awarded to citizens of Mexico against the United States.
> The committee are of the opinion that the House of Representatives has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter referred by the joint resolution, and that the Mexican Republic has not made, and could not properly make, any application to the legislative department of this Government.

In the remainder of the report the general proposition is discussed as to the power of Congress to take up a political subject of this sort and refer it to a municipal tribunal for adjudication.

Not satisfied with this, Mr. President, this question again came up in the House of Representatives, when my friend from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], not now in his seat, was a distinguished member of that body. There it came up in the Fiftieth Congress after the new evidence of Mexico, upon which such reliance is put here now, had been furnished; and after the letter-press book had been put in evidence; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives made an elaborate examination and made their report upon it. Mr. DANIEL submitted the report, in which the committee came to a conclusion by a vote of 10 to 3, with all this new evidence before them, with counsel upon both sides of the most distinguished ability to argue the case, that upon the facts of the case the La Abra award ought not to be opened. That was done by a vote of 10 to 3, and yet Mexico comes here again and says that we must have another examination, sixteen years after the award has been made, when death has sealed the lips of the men who knew more about it than anybody possibly could, and who are now charged with perjury in writing and orally in order that their descendants may not receive their proportionate share of what was given them by the umpire, Sir Edward Thornton. I ask that the portion of the report which I have marked, and only a small portion of Mr. DANIEL'S report, be read.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator kindly state what he reads from?

Mr. VEST. From Mr. DANIEL'S report in the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOLPH. Is that the document the Senator has in his hand?

Mr. VEST. No; this is——

Mr. DOLPH. I was trying to get an extract from the report read in the Senator's speech yesterday, and I understood that the Reporter could not find the document the Senator was reading from.

Mr. VEST. One of the Reporters told me this morning that he could not find that document. I have three copies of it on my desk, and I handed him one this morning. It was published by authority of the Senate. It is the minority report of Governor Brown, and every Senator upon the Committee on Foreign Relations has seen it, and it can be obtained at the document room without trouble. I do not know what the Senator from Oregon means by saying that it can not be obtained. Does the Senator suppose that I would bring in here a fictitious or surreptitious document?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator has entirely mistaken what I said. I simply asked the Senator what document he read from, and I stated that the Reporter had said to me this morning that he could not find it. I desired to facilitate the work of the Reporter, so that to-morrow morning I might have an opportunity to see in the RECORD the Senator speech, because I propose to reply to it.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will see my speech in the RECORD as a matter of course. I was astonished myself, I will say to the Senator from Oregon, when the Reporter told me he could not find this document. I had five copies of it. I handed one of them yesterday to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] who sits in rear of me, and I gave another to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I had three of them left, one of which I handed to the Reporter this morning. There is no trouble about finding it, and every citation made in this minority report can be tested as to its accuracy by referring to the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN (to Mr. VEST). Can you find Mr. DANIEL'S report?

Mr. VEST. No, I am hunting for Mr. DANIEL'S report. This is the minority report, No. 2705, part 2. The report of Mr. (now Senator) DANIEL was made from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-ninth Congress, and it was made, as I have stated, upon all the evidence, new and old——

Mr. MORGAN. That was long before De Lagnel was examined.

Mr. VEST. Leaving out possibly De Lagnel's testimony, but the letter-press book was before the committee, the letterpress book upon which I understand the stress of this application to reopen the whole matter on the ground of fraud is based. As to De Lagnel, I will come to him directly. I accept every word of his as true, and he is one of the best witnesses in this whole case for the La Abra Company.

I will submit this whole case on his testimony, and do it with alacrity. I shall proceed in a very few minutes to show that the Senator from Alabama was grossly mistaken yesterday when he said that the minority report of Senator Brown had misquoted the testimony of De Lagnel upon a most important issue. But I will dispose of this report of the House of Representatives first. I ask the Chief Clerk to read from the report the grounds on which the House committee reported against any interference with this award.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> Undoubtedly some of the items of the large claim asserted against Mexico by the La Abra Company are shown to have been exaggerated and others unfounded. But this remains when all that can be reasonably said in favor of the interference proposed has been considered—that there was ample evidence before Sir Edward Thornton that is not impugned by any new evidence to have sustained and warranted his award; that the award did not embrace damages on account of the items that have been surcharged or apparently falsified; that that award was far below what was claimed—that it was far below in amount the damages which, in the opinion of unimpugned witnesses, the claimant's company suffered; that it did not embrace speculative damages; that the mistreatment of the company by Mexican officials and people is proved by their own testimony; and that conceding all that by reasonable intendment the newly discovered evidence proves the award made had ample foundation in testimony, not successfully impeached, and was not in excess of fair compensation for losses suffered according to that testimony.
> The United States has never undertaken to be themselves the judge of the legitimacy of these claims, nor could they do so. They were a party to the arbitration, not the arbitor. The legitimacy of the claims was the very question submitted to the court of arbitration under the treaty; and while it is true that with an exalted and refined sense of honor, which of its own instructive impulse refuses the fruit of wrong, the United States will interfere to arrest palpable frauds and impositions practiced by or for the benefit of its citizens. It is also true that they should not attenuate that sense of honor into a Quixotic spirit, and exert its powers to override the most sacred settlements not palpably or apparently obtained by fraud. Were this case reopened by any form of procedure abundance of evidence would be found unimpeached in the records before Sir Edward Thornton to justify his judgment.
> The new case, like the old one, would be a case where truth had to be sought under a mass of contradictions, and at the end of it—whatever that end might be—there would be as much room to question the propriety of the decree as there is now. Indeed, such a case as this can never be ended save by the finality that belongs to adjudication. Affidavits and counter affidavits—allegations of intimidation and extortion—recantations and recriminations and reassertions bestrew the record, and no one who reads its heaps of testimony (taken without regard to technical rules, and with no sort of discrimination between direct and hearsay evidence) can reach any other conclusion than that the details of exact truth are impossible of ascertainment, and that any decision should be predicated upon the few landmark facts which are established.
> This Sir Edward Thornton evidently well appreciated. He did not discuss the minutiæ of evidence, or refer to that of any single witness. He did not award the speculative damages claimed, or follow counsel in any of the niceties of their argumentation. With the spirit of a wise chancellor he looked at the facts which rose up out of the débris of testimony, and upon them rested his judgment. Those facts remain, and that judgment, in our opinion, should stand: and we fail to see that the honor or conscience of the United States is concerned to disturb it.
> Mexico had full and fair hearing. The great mass of cases was decided in her favor, and the only maxim which we conceive is now wisely applicable to this claim is that which tells us it is to the interest of the Commonwealth that litigation should cease.

Mr. VEST. That report was made, as I have said, by a vote of 10 to 3, after an exhaustive examination of all the facts in this case by that committee. In the first place, Mexico brought the question up after five years' consideration before the umpire, when the American commissioner, after hearing all the facts, voted one way in favor of the claim and the Mexican commissioner had voted against it, and the umpire then heard all the case and decided in favor of the award of $687,000 to the La Abra Mining Company. Mexico then put in a long and elaborate motion for a new hearing, in which they charged wholesale perjury and fraud, specifying the Mexican witnesses who had sworn falsely, arraigning, as having been guilty of perjury, the very witnesses whom they now bring in here themselves and put on the stand as worthy of credit.

Dahlgren, who comes here now, and whose evidence is found in this report as a new witness, said that he was a son of Admiral Dahlgren, and I shall show, by the argument of the Mexican authorities before the umpire, that they charged him with robbery and as a man unworthy of credit. He is brought here now and paraded as a man whose deposition was manufactured, and he says he signed a blank piece of paper or some notes, and they were filled up afterwards, a tale that no justice of the peace would tolerate for a second and no respectable lawyer would contemplate with anything but derision. This man, whose testimony is brought here now to induce the Congress of the United States to send this case to the Court of Claims, was denounced by the Mexican authorities and by the Mexican counsel as a robber and a man unworthy of credit.

Another one of the witnesses brought here is a man named Elder, and the evidence shows that he tried to sell his testimony, according to his own admission, to both parties. He told a man going across the ferry from Mare Island navy-yard to San Francisco, or from Oakland to San Francisco, that the Mexican Government had offered him $50,000 to testify. He replied to the subpœna of the Sergeant-at-Arms to appear before the subcommittee of the Senate that he must be paid for it; that he would not come here for the ordinary fees of a witness. He is a man who swore for both parties; who was as much in market with his evidence as ever corn or wheat were offered in market overt to the best bidder. By his own confession a perjured scoundrel before all the world, unblushingly so, parading his villainy out of his own mouth; and he is brought here now as one of the new witnesses, or rather with a new story, to reopen this award and take the money away from these claimants!

To show how Mexico conducted this case I wish to call attention to one statement of the umpire. This was in his ruling upon the motion for a rehearing.

In the case No. 489, "La Abra Mining Company vs. Mexico"—

Says Sir Edward Thornton—

the Mexican agent appeals to authorities as to the value of ores, who, he states, are at Philadelphia. Why were not the statements of these gentlemen—of whose existence the umpire was not aware, and to whom he had not access—reduced to evidence and produced before the Commission.

As I stated yesterday, they had evidence they would not produce until the case was decided against them, and then they undertook to bring it on a motion for a rehearing without ever having submitted it to the umpire at all.

Have these claimants no rights at all in this case? Are they to be denounced simply as wholesale perjurers and turned out of court, innocent people who never had anything to do with this litigation? And are we now to understand that there shall be no examination of the matter except by the Court of Claims which reports simply to the President, to the political department of the Government, that there has been fraud and false swearing that brought about this award?

How are they to determine whether that brought it about? How are they to arrive at a conclusion in regard to the ratiocinations and mental processes of Sir Edward Thornton? How are they to determine what induced that award in his mind? And if they find in regard to any portion of it that it was brought about by fraud and false swearing, then so much of the award is to be returned by the President to Mexico. In other words, the United States Government tries the case for Mexico, pays all expenses and returns the money if the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court on appeal (and I will speak of that directly) should find that this award was superinduced or brought about by fraud and false swearing—not by perjury, but false swearing.

Mr. President, especially since the Senator from Oregon alluded to the minority report of ex-Senator Brown, I am glad to come to an issue made between the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and myself just before we adjourned yesterday. I read from the minority report the testimony of Col. De Lagnel, who is accepted as an honest man by both parties. I read from that minority report; when the Senator from Alabama rose in his seat and denied that that was a correct report, and said that the record, as he expressed it, did not substantiate what I had read as coming from De Lagnel as a witness.

I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Fiftieth Congress, second session, Report No. 2705, submitted by Mr. DOLPH, and in the appendix to that report is the testimony of the witnesses; and the first witness examined is De Lagnel, who had never testified before. He appeared for the first time before the subcommittee, and as to the extract which I read I propose to read it again, and I wish that Senators had in their hands the minority report, to see whether there is the variation of a syllable, of the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," between one report and the other.

Mr. MORGAN. What page do you read from?

Mr. VEST. I read from page 95 of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Well—

Asked Mr. Wilson—

there was hostility to Americans there?

That is, at Tayoltita, at the mines.

That existed at that time and I just mention just what I know. My own clerk, a young man who was employed in the store, a Mexican born and raised in San Ignacio, 70 miles from the mines—he had been educated in California, and spoke English as well as I could; in talking with him one evening, discussing this very thing, he just scouted the idea of the withdrawal of the French being due to the United States Government, and I tried to show him that without the United States Mexico would never have got rid of the French; but he scouted it, and speaking of what the Mexicans were capable of and so went on to speak as if they were able to take care of themselves with any people or peoples. I said, speaking to him: "You ought not to give heed to these reports"—something of the sort—"because the Americans are friendly to you. They certainly have shown it in this late action of the Government in assisting in ridding you of this foreign control, and you ought to feel kindly towards them." He said, "we hate them." I said—he was only a boy—"how can you?" I said, "I was here in 1847 in the City of Mexico, and you were born about the close of the war. You are a boy now, how can you have that feeling?" "I have no feeling one way or another towards you except—because," he said, "it was taught us by our fathers. They have told us all and they keep at it."

I should be obliged now to the Senator from Alabama to show me any difference between that and the statement in the minority report. There it is, and I read it yesterday word for word taken from this paper. Here it is on page 20 of the minority report word for word and letter for letter, identical with the evidence that I have read from the report of the committee at large.

Mr. President, it will be noticed, if Senators feel enough interest in this matter to look at the testimony of De Lagnel, that this boy had been prejudiced by his father. Every man familar with Mexicans and especially the lower orders knows that that is the fact all through Mexico. In addition to that, the evidence shows in reference to these matters, if Senators will look at the context in the other testimony of De Lagnel, that the report was spread all over Mexico at the close of our civil war that Gen. Butler was on his way with an army to seize the State of Durango and annex it to the United States.

It had inflamed that population, inflammable at all times, to perfect exasperation, until they had come to the conclusion, officers and people, that the Gringos, as they call the Americans, the locos, or fools, from the north should not be permitted to stay in that country. De Lagnel says they were governed greatly by self-interest. As long as the Americans brought money there and spent it they were señors, hidalgos, but the very minute there was any scarcity of money, the very minute the Mexicans did not receive what they wanted, the very minute that the superintendent of this mine changed the proportion between the cash to the employés, and the goods delivered, even to a fraction, that very instant magistrates and people rose against the company.

In the letters here which are paraded with so much zeal, that are found in this letterpress book from this man Exall, the third and last superintendent of the mines, to David J. Garth, the treasurer, in the city of New York, in 1868, we find the statement from Exall that the authorities are becoming more and more troublesome; and yet the majority report says that Mexico protected our people; that the officials there gave all the protection that was necessary. At the time that Exall wrote this letter he could not have had any object except to have stated the truth, unless it was a part of a deep-laid scheme on his part to disgust the New York stockholders and get possession of the mine himself, which I have no doubt was ultimately his intention. I am not here to defend him, but I am here to defend the innocent people who believe honestly that they have a right to a portion of this award, and that this international arbitration ought to be ended some time or another.

Mr. MORGAN. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. VEST. Of course; with pleasure.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator refers to innocent people here a great deal. I desire now to read the list of assignments made by the La Abra Silver Mining Company of this fund, and ask him to inform the Senate, if he knows, which class of people or who are the innocent ones. The fund has been distributed as far as it has been paid in up to a certain time—three or four installments of it—into the hands of persons who had made claims before the Department. Mr. Bayard, in reply to a letter I addressed to him on the 21st of February, 1889, gives a list of assignments made by the La Abra Silver Mining Company.

Conditional assignment by Alonzo W. Adams (dated December 13, 1871, to Wedworth Wadsworth of two twenty-fifths of his interest (one-third) in this award to secure notes of $2,000 and interest. Indorsed on this assignment is a transfer of interest by Wadsworth to Henry C. Hepburn. (Filed in Department January 25, 1879.)

NOTE.—This assignment has been satisfied so far as the Department is concerned.

Agreement between Sumner Stow Ely, A. W. Adams, and George H. Williams (dated October 9, 1879), whereby Mr. Williams is to receive $16,000; $3,326.50 out of first and second installments and balance pro rata out of subsequent installments. (Filed in Department October 18, 1879.)

Assignment by La Abra Mining Company (dated February 4, 1881) to Charles T. Parry and Joseph Hopkinson of $1,400; $1,257.20 to be paid out of third installment and $314.28 out of each of ten succeeding installments commencing with the fifth. (Filed in Department February 5, 1881.)

Decree of supreme court of District of Columbia (dated January 21, 1881), that $15,000 shall be paid out of fourth installment, as follows:

F. P. Stanton, $3,333.33; T. W. Bartley $3,333.33; W. W. Boyce $3,333.33; A. W. Adams, $5,000. (Filed in Department January 25, 1881.)

Assignment by La Abra Company to Cyrus C. Camp (dated May 6, 1880) of $10,000, to be taken in eleven payments of $909.10 each. (Filed September 14, 1880.)

Assignment by La Abra Company to Shellabarger & Wilson (dated February 4, 1881) of $5,266; $2,633 to be paid out of the fifth installment and $2,633 out of the sixth installment. (Filed February 8, 1881.)

Assignment by La Abra Company to W. W. Boyce (dated February 5, 1881) of $8,666, to be paid pro rata. (Filed February 8, 1881.)

Assignment by La Abra Company to Thomas W. Bartley (dated February 5, 1881) of $6,166.66, to be paid pro rata. (Filed February 8, 1881.)
Assignment of La Abra Company to Frederick P. Stanton (dated February 5, 1881) of $6,166.66, to be paid pro rata. (Filed February 8, 1881.)
Assignment of La Abra Company to Thomas W. Bartley (dated November 23, 1881) of $2,500 out of the fifth installment and $833.33 out of each of the succeeding eight installments. (Filed in Department November 25, 1881.)
Assignment by La Abra Company to Frederick P. Stanton, same as above to Bartley. (Filed November 25, 1881.)
Assignment by La Abra Company to George Ticknor Curtis of $850; this assignment is conditional. (Filed June 30, 1884.)
Assignment by La Abra Company to John H. Rice (dated January 10, 1883) of $3,857.15, payable in sums of $428.27 out of each installment, commencing with the sixth. (Filed February 26, 1886.)
Assignment by La Abra Company to George Ticknor Curtis (dated May 29, 1885) of $1,650, on same terms as previous assignment. (Filed April 29, 1886.)
Conditional assignment by A. W. Adams to Shellabarger & Wilson (dated May 12, 1884) of $5,000, to be paid out of the sixth installment. (Filed September 23, 1886).
Assignment by La Abra Company to Eugene Jones (dated June 29, 1880), of $34,000, to be paid in eleven equal installments. Mr. Jones admits having received $6,181.80 on this account. (Filed March 28, 1887.)
Assignment by La Abra Company to Shellabarger & Wilson (dated March 5, 1887) of $3,333.34, to be paid out of sixth installment. (Filed April 1, 1887.)
Conditional assignment by Alonzo W. Adams to Crammond Kennedy (dated May 20, 1886) of $2,500. (Filed April 2, 1887.)
NOTE.—Mr. Kennedy claims that the foregoing amount has been increased to $5,000, but no agreement to that effect has been filed in the Department.

I should be obliged to the Senator from Missouri if he would state under which one of these assignments these innocent people are holding. I do not see Mr. Bartholow's heirs mentioned here or any other person except the attorneys in this case, and Mr. Adams, and the secretary of the company. The evidence in the case shows that the company insolvent, and the funds, instead of going through a regular corporation administration, seem to have parceled themselves out under this very long list of assignments until the attorneys who are of record in this cause, and whose names will be pointed out later in connection with their services here, seem to have become the heirs at law and inheritors, so far as I can see, of the entire fund.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I could not hear distinctly the Senator's statement. Does he mean to be understood as saying the assignees consist exclusively of the attorneys and representatives of the La Abra Company?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Adams is not an attorney; he is a party in interest, one of the promoters of this award, and very active in the promotion of it. He gets the lion's share here.

Mr. GEORGE. Who is he? Is he a member of the La Abra Company or an officer?

Mr. MORGAN. No, not as I remember; I do not think he was a member or an officer. When I come to explain this matter to the Senate I shall read the deposition of Mr. Ely, who was the secretary of this company during all of its existence, and we will then ascertain. As I understand his testimony, the company is insolvent, but nobody gets anything out of it except those men who promoted its claim here as attorneys or in some other capacity. I do not find that Mr. Bartholow has any interest here or any other person, except those who have got these assignments, as it appears, for services rendered early or late.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator stated that Mr. Adams was a promoter of the claim?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean by that that he assisted in the prosecution of the claim before the Mexican Commission?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is no sort of question but that these assignments were made, and made to pay lawyers and agents to obtain testimony,

Mr. MORGAN. They got it all, so far as I can find out.

Mr. VEST. Yes, and Mr. Garth says in his testimony before the subcommittee of which the Senator from Alabama was chairman, that he had never received anything out of the two hundred and sixty-odd thousand dollars that had been paid by the Government on the first installments.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Garth was a stockholder.

Mr. VEST. Of course he was.

Mr. MORGAN. He was the company; he never got anything.

Mr. VEST. Of course not; and all this money was exhausted in paying the expenses of litigation.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the Mexican Commission?

Mr. VEST. Before the Mexican Commission to get testimony and pay lawyers. Of course such attorneys as Shellabarger & Wilson do not practice law for amusement.

Mr. MORGAN. They were not before the Commission at all. The greater part of these assignments has been for services rendered since this cause has been before Congress.

Mr. VEST. Very good; there is no question in the world but that W. W. Boyce, whom a great many of us knew, and other men who were engaged in prosecuting claims here in the city of Washington, received money out of the portion of the award that was paid over to this company. A large amount of money——

Mr. GEORGE. That is an important point to me. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to admit that the assignees of this fund, who claim now to be innocent purchasers without notice, are the attorneys who represented the claim before the Mexican Commission and who subsequently represented the claim before the committees of either House of Congress?

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that this assignment goes to the whole claim. This was the assignment of the money paid over by the United States Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Was nobody interested in the surplus except the company? Has the whole fund been assigned?

Mr. VEST. I know nobody interested in it except the stockholders who are living and descendants of those dead.

Mr. GEORGE. They are the company?

Mr. VEST. Yes, so far as my information goes.

Mr. MORGAN. They are not innocent people, though?

Mr. GEORGE. I want to understand it.

Mr. VEST. If Senators will allow me, I will show who were the innocent people.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me understand it. I understand it this way, if I am correct, that all the persons who claim as innocent purchasers of this fund are the attorneys who represented the claim before the Mexican Commission and who have since represented the interest of that claim before the committees in the two Houses of Congress, except those who have an interest as stockholders in the La Abra Company. Is that the attitude of it?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator is through I will state what I understand. But I have no personal knowledge about it. I have stated all my connection with it fully to the Senate. All that I know about it is what I derive from this testimony. The letters I have received from my constituents simply appeal to me to resist this bill because it amounts virtually to a judgment against them. That is all; my personal knowledge amounts to nothing. I never conversed even with one of them in regard to it. I never had any written correspondence with anybody in regard to it.

I can not state accurately who is interested now in this award, because there have been assignments and payments from time to time until it would be impossible without an examination authoritatively to tell who now owns it. But I do know this, if human testimony is worth anything at all, that there are widows and orphans and trustees in the State of Missouri who own by inheritance portions of this award and who have nothing else under heaven. I know that. I am reminded of it by the presence of the governor of Missouri upon this floor, not upon that business at all, for he knows nothing whatever about it, but his father-in-law, John D. Perry, of St. Louis, was one of the stockholders, having paid in $5,000, or $10,000 possibly; and he never received a cent.

Mr. GEORGE. For stock in the La Abra Company?

Mr. VEST. For stock in the La Abra Company. I take it for granted that W. W. Boyce, of South Carolina, a former member of Congress, and who, after the war became a claim agent or attorney in this city, was employed in this case, for I see payments were made to him. He was paid out of the money that was paid by the Government upon this award in the installments that were settled without any trouble. We are now discussing the money that is still there and unpaid, of course. This company I have no doubt is insolvent; there is not the slightest question about it from the testimony of Mr. Garth. Mr. Garth was the treasurer, who paid in $50,000 at one time and advanced it out of his own pocket. He afterwards advanced $20,000 as a loan to the company. In the administration of De Lagnel $60,000 in money was sent from New York that these stockholders advanced to the company. Garth says that he would go to one stockholder and another, and tell them, "you are in $5,000 now; if you do not put up more you will lose the whole investment."

Mr. GEORGE. Garth was a stockholder?

Mr. VEST. Of course; possibly the largest stockholder. He was the treasurer of the company, and John Garth his brother, who lives near Hannibal, Mo., as reputable a man as there is on the face of the earth, was another stockholder, and put up $10,000 of his money. There are very few of them living. Adams is dead. He appeared here as agent for the La Abra Company. He went to Mexico and took testimony. He went there in the unsettled condition of the country over the mountains and stayed months among these Mexicans. Of course he had to be paid for it. These things are not done for sentiment. We understand that any claim against this Government must have its representatives, and paid representatives, as claim agents or lawyers, and this city is full of them, many of them reputable men and many of them a disgrace to the legal profession to which they claim to belong. But among them are men of as high honor, professionally and personally, as tnere are in the world. Of course they had to be paid in order to get one dollar.

Look at the odds against the claimants. Here was the State Department refusing to pay; here were eminent counsel engaged by Mexico; here was my distinguished friend in front of me, with all his ability, for which I have the highest respect, and his zeal for what he believes to be right; here were these claimants whose money was all gone, $600,000 buried in the ground or squandered among the Mexicans at Tayoltita—were they to sit silent and do nothing and employ nobody? They were compelled to employ counsel and agents to take this testimony and to represent their case before the committees of Congress, in the courts, and before the Departments.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to confuse the Senator, but——

Mr. VEST. It does not confuse me at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I was trying to get at this point, that there is nobody now claiming this fund except the stockholders in the La Abra Company and persons who received assignments of portions of the fund for their services.

Mr. VEST. Oh, no; I most distinctly stated, if the English language means anything for me, that there are trustees, and widows and orphans, who never had anything to do with this matter, whose husbands and fathers are dead; and I was about to read the list.

Mr. GEORGE. They claim by inheritance?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; then I will put it this way: There was nobody then interested except persons who received assignments for their services in prosecuting this claim before the Commission or before Congress, or their legal representatives, they getting the title of representatives by inheritance. Is that correct?

Mr. VEST. I do not know, Mr. President. I have simply this to say, that there is no evidence in the world to show that the same assignees are interested now who were interested at the time that report was made. I know as a matter of fact that they are not. Mr. Boyce is dead. He can not be interested. He has nobody to represent him or perform any services. That assignment was of the money already allowed or paid. The Senator from Mississippi seems to be laboring under the misapprehension that that was an assignment of the whole award, in futuro. Not at all. The company was compelled, or the parties interested were compelled to pay these attorneys and agents from time to time, and they could only pay them out of the money they got from the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that is the very point I was trying to arrive at, whether the persons, being alive or being dead and represented by their heirs, are those who got the assignments to pay for services rendered in the prosecution of the claim.

Mr. VEST. I do not know of any such case as that. I will state what my understanding of the matter is, and I derive it simply from the papers; for I repeat I have never had conversation or communication with anybody except my constituents, trustees, widows, administrators, or executors, and others, who represent now the interests which they inherited in this award; but——

Mr. GEORGE. How did the persons from whom they inherit get it?

Mr. VEST. Stockholders. All I know were stockholders; there was not a lawyer or assignee in the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. They were stockholders?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course.

Mr. GEORGE. Stockholders of the company?

Mr. VEST. Yes; for instance, Gen. Bartholow, who paid in $10,000. His estate to-day is insolvent, and all that his children have in the world is their expectation, or hope, of obtaining their proportion of this award.

Mr. GEORGE. It is not claimed that they are innocent purchases, but they are representatives of stockholders of the company?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, but they are innocent; they had nothing to do with this matter; they had nothing to do with any fraud or any false swearing; their only fault, if it be any fault, is that they inherited this right, as they claim, in this award which is now sixteen years after the issue was decided, being disputed in the Senate.

To show how busy death has been in this matter I will read again what I read yesterday, to show how few of the men who were actively engaged in the matter are now living. Here, for instance, in the death roll is George C. Bissell, a superintendent of mines adjoining La Abra mines; John P. Cryder, a lawyer and miner residing in Mexico; Francis F. Dana, for twenty years a resident of Mexico, and a lieutenant-colonel in the Mexican army in the war of the French invasion; A. W. Adams, the agent of the company in the taking of the testimony of its witnesses; George C. Collins, the president of the company during the period when the claim arose; Thomas J. Bartholow, the first, and Charles H. Exall, the last, superintendent of the company. All these men are dead and the inheritance of those who were stockholders has gone down to their children or their collateral kindred, as the case may be.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. VEST. Just as many as the Senator pleases. I shall be glad to answer him.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to know if the Senator contends that the heirs or the legal representatives of deceased parties have a superior right to that of the parties from whom they inherit?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of law, of course not. That is elementary law. It is hardly necessary to ask me that; but the point I am making is that against these heirs, who know nothing about the matter and who had under the terms of this international arbitration every right to believe that it was a finality, it is not equity and abstract justice, sixteen years afterwards and when their fathers are dead, who did know all about it, for Mexico now to bring this matter up and say that fraud and false swearing has been perpetrated. That is the point I make.

I claim here that American citizens have as many rights as the Government of Mexico, and that this is not an ex parte proceeding, but one that appeals to the sense of justice and manhood of every Senator upon this floor or every man within the United States. I know (and it requires no evidence to show it) that the people interested in this claim were compelled to employ agents and attorneys. If there is a man who has been in Washington city twenty-four hours who does not know that, he is obtuse to the point of idiocy. These streets and lobbies swarm with claim agents of every description, and they are here living upon this sort of business.

The La Abra Company, I have no doubt, was insolvent. Mr. Garth says they refused to pay out more; that they were driven out of the country, as they contend; that they were in all sorts of difficulties, and they refused to put any more money into these Tayoltita mines. The La Abra Company had no assets except these Tayoltita mines.

These men who got these assignments from time to time out of the money paid to the La Abra Company by the Secretary of State are not now the agents or attorneys of the company. They were changed from time to time. When so many thousand or hundred dollars, as the case may be, were received out of the award the agent was paid. He had to live and support his family. One of them, W. W. Boyce, lived on a little farm, where he died, between here and Baltimore, and he had to be paid and other agents had to be paid. Is there anything criminal in that? Is there anything wrong in that? How else could this claim have been prosecuted?

But, Mr. President, in the language of a very grandiloquent orator who was once in this body, "gentlemen who reside in houses constructed of diaphanous materials should not throw projectiles." In other words, people who live in glass houses ought not to throw rocks. It does not lie in the mouth of Mexico to talk about employing agents. I have a document I want to read, which has a great deal of significance in this connection, and that is the contract between Gen. Slaughter, of Mobile, Ala., and the Mexican Government.

This agreement, made this 29th day of March, A. D. 1877, by and between Gen. James E. Slaughter, of Mobile, Ala., party of the first part, and Señor Don Ignacio Mariscal, minister of Mexico to the United States, party of the second part,

Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part agrees, for the considerations hereinafter named, to undertake the proof of fraud in the claim of the La Abra Mining Company against the Government of Mexico, which claim is numbered 489 on the docket of the Joint Commission of the United States and Mexico and has been adjudicated by the umpire of said Commission.

To this end the said party of the first part agrees to send an agent to Mexico for the purpose of securing testimony in proof of the fraudulent character of said claim; to pay the expenses of such agent as far as the City of Mexico; and to secure such assistance as may be necessary in preparing the evidence so obtained and presenting the same to the proper authorities of the Government of the United States.

The said party of the second part—

Mexico or its minister—

acting for and in behalf of the Government of Mexico, hereby agrees to secure the payment by the said Government of all expenses incurred by the said agent of the party of the first part after he shall have arrived in the City of Mexico; to see that all facilities are furnished by said Government to enable him to secure the necessary testimony, and to pay, by draft payable as hereinafter specified, one-half of the expense incurred by the said party of the first part in the preparation of evidence and the presentation of the same to the proper authorities of the Government of the United States; provided, that such expense shall not exceed the sum of $3,000, American currency.

And the said party of the second part further agrees, in consideration of the services above named, to pay to the said party of the first part, by drafts upon the national treasury of Mexico, payable in Mexican gold ten months after presentation at said treasury, a sum equal to 10 per cent of any portion of said claim which may be waived or finally withdrawn by the proper authorities of the Government of the United States, or of its total amount if it be waived or withdrawn in the same manner; said drafts to be drawn by the minister of Mexico at Washington immediately upon the final waiver or withdrawal of said claim or any portion thereof, as the case may be, by said authorities of the United States Government.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our respective hands and seals this 29th day of March, A. D. 1877.

JAMES E. SLAUGHTER.
IGNACIO MARISCAL.

Now, Mr. President, what would be thought, or what ought to be thought, of a friendly power which, after submitting an award to international arbitration, with the extraordinary language in it that the decision of the umpire should be final, without delay or objection—what would be thought of a government under these circumstances, before they paid the money and after the case was decided against them, employing a citizen of the other government to furnish proof that there was fraud in the case in order to get rid of the obligation? Why, when the claim was pending by Great Britain against the United States in regard to the fisheries, and when it was arbitrated, and there was an award of $5,500,000 against this country, which was subsequently paid, we all recollect that there was a statement in the newspapers and a statement by the Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts at the time, that there had been fraud and unfair dealing in the obtaining of that award.

Supposing it had come out in the public press that pending the payment of that award, when the conclusion was to be final between these two countries, the American Government had sent to England and employed an English subject to get up testimony to defeat that award, what would be thought of it by the civilized world? It will not do to answer that fraud vitiates everything and justifies everything to overthrow it. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that this is no ordinary proceeding and the technical rules of law do not apply to it. As Senator DANIEL said in his report in the House of Representatives, and as Mr. Evarts himself said, there ought to be an end of a controversy of this sort in the interest of the peace of the world between two great nations.

If this were a case in court depending upon the ita lex scripta est, different rules would apply. If I were here pleading this case as a lawyer I would welcome the conclusion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], as I understood him yesterday, that this was a motion for a retrial. Under every rule that governs a motion for a new trial Mexico is out of court, and it is simply evading the whole question to say that Mexico is not now a party, because this proceeding is in the interest of Mexico, continuing the conduct of Mexico for sixteen long years, to do away with the absolute agreement, that the award of the umpire should be final, without objection and without delay.

Mr. President, I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to print certain portions of the minority report which contain citations of authorities and extracts of evidence. I do not propose to insert the whole report with the argument in the RECORD, but I am not able physically to read all this testimony, and I should like, therefore, to have that permission.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection at all to the Senator printing anything in his remarks that he desires to do, but at the same time a little controversy arose between him and myself yesterday as to whether that so-called minority report, which is no more than a brief of counsel, prepared by Shellabarger & Wilson, contains a fair statement or a mutilated statement of the testimony of De Lagnel before the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

The Senator from Missouri read yesterday a portion of the testimony of De Lagnel. He got down onto page 109. He was reading then from the report on page 21, and he read an extract from the report here, which makes the quotation from the report of the subcommittee.

Mr. VEST. On page 21?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

In answer to a question put by Mr. Foster, Col. De Lagnel gave the subcommittee another illustration of this popular excitability—

Amongst the Mexican people; and then goes on to quote the extract down to these words:

These explosions only occurred, I may say, when they were possibly half full of liquor, but that is very frequently.

Underscoring it, as it was not in the original report.

That night I could hear, as I lay down to sleep, the cries of these people blackguarding and cursing the people in that hacienda.

There was a semicolon in the report of the committee, but the Senator, or the attorney who has made the quotation, put a period there, and after the semicolon follows these words in the same sentence:

But there is some excuse to be made for that class of population.

A period.

When they were sober I never had discourtesy from any of them.

I merely refer to this to show the Senator that the quotations from the text of this report were not accurate and not just.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will do me the justice to say that I never read that testimony.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not believe you ever did.

Mr. VEST. I mean I never read that yesterday. I have read it, of course, in this document.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator read it.

Mr. VEST. No, sir; I am not mistaken. I never read it.

Mr. MORGAN. My eye was resting on that particular extract at the time.

Mr. VEST. I thought the Senator was laboring under a delusion at the time. He was mistaken.

Mr. MORGAN. My eye was resting upon that particular extract at the time the Senator asked me the question whether or not the report had been correctly quoted, and I told him it had not been.

Mr. VEST. I am glad the Senator calls my attention to it, because I intended to have read it, and I shall be glad to bring it before the Senate. I overlooked it in the mass of this testimony. The testimony I read yesterday will show, as any Senator will remember who paid any attention to me, that it was that portion of De Lagnel's testimony in regard to what his boy clerk told him. That is all I read, but I intended, I will tell the Senator frankly, to read the other.

Mr. MORGAN. That may be, but the Senator from Missouri put to me a question—I do not know about putting the question, but he raised the question as to whether or not this minority report, so called, had correctly quoted the testimony out of the report of the committee, and I told him it had not.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, I supposed the Senator referred to what I had read.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not referring to anything except to what I knew.

Mr. VEST. I referred to a particular portion of the testimony, and I remember exactly what occurred. I was reading the statement I have alluded to in regard to De Lagnel's clerk, and the Senator from Alabama rose and said, "From what does the Senator read?" and I said, "From the minority report." The Senator then said, "That report is not correct," or words to that effect.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I said.

Mr. VEST. And just then the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] interrupted me and asked me to yield to a motion to adjourn. The Senator from Alabama is mistaken. What I did read was literally word for word and syllable for syllable——

Mr. MORGAN. I did not say that what the Senator from Missouri was reading was not correct, but that I said the report was not correct.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator had specified what portion of the report there would have been no trouble about it.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not have the time to specify then, but may hereafter.

Mr. VEST. Very good. If the Senator will go to the report of the testimony taken by the committee he will find that De Lagnel went to a neighboring hacienda or mine and spent the night, and that the Mexican populace held them substantially in a state of siege.

Mr. MORGAN. He does not say so. He says they merely got drunk.

Mr. VEST. He says, "We could hear their threats and curses and expected to be attacked." That is the testimony.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will read that I should be obliged to him.

Mr. VEST. I may not have used the exact language. If the Senator will hand me that report I will read it. He may not have used the word "attacked," but that is the substance of it. I am quoting from memory. Here it is:

I have asked—

Said Mr. Wilson to De Lagnel—

you whether you have a general knowledge of the condition of affairs at the nearest company to yours, the Durango Mining Company. I want to know now from your general knowledge whether they were interrupted or had any serious difficulty with the Mexican authorities while you were there?

A. I can not give testimony to any act on their part interfering with the company directly. I recollect one night, the only one night I ever spent in Mr. Rice's hacienda—I recollect on that occasion the sentiment in the town was so hostile that they told me they were expecting an attack at any moment—

I do not think that I was mistaken—

they were expecting an attack at any moment and were prepared to resist it That I remember perfectly. I slept in the hacienda that night. As I passed through the town I came—it is a peculiar place to get in; you have to wind up the side of a formation that can be barred by a dozen men; you go through a deep ravine and then to the hacienda, so that people in the town would look down into Rice's hacienda below. These explosions only occurred, I may say, when they were possibly half full of liquor, but that is very frequently. That night I could hear as I lay down to sleep the cries of these people, blackguarding and cursing the people in that hacienda; but there is some excuse to be made for that class of population. When they were sober I never had discourtesy from any of them.

I read the testimony of Col. De Lagnel in regard to what passed between him and his boy clerk, showing that I did not propose to suppress any of this testimony, in which he says that self-interest to a large extent governs these people; that as long as you paid them their wages they were not dangerous; but he further says that this hostile feeling existed, and that this man Soto, a justice of the peace there, who had this wine shop, was a dangerous man, a man that could stir them up to any sort of outrage at any time. That is the substance of De Lagnel's testimony, and he is accepted as a credible witness by both parties.

Mr. President, great stress is put upon the letterpress copies of letters which are received in this case. I want to say a few words in regard to them.

Bartholow was the first superintendent of this mine, De Lagnel was the second, and Charles H. Exall was the third. Exall left the mine. I can not be accurate in my recollection as to dates, but my impression is that he left there in the spring of 1868. If I misstate it is not intentional. He went down to Mazatlan, which was 160 miles from Tayoltita, on the seacoast, and went from there to the city of New York. A letter is produced from him, written about that time to a man named Granger, an Englishman, who was his clerk, in which—I will not read it, but the substance of it was that he turned over the property of the company to Granger, and told him that he was going to New York to see the officers of the company.

These letters show that after paying $60,000 during the administration of De Lagnel, the stockholders in New York became tired, as they naturally would, and they told Mr. Exall, who went out to take charge in place of De Lagnel, that he must not draw upon them for any more money, that he must make his expenses out of the product of the mine; and he did so; and the evidence shows that, except an inconsiderable amount, he did pay the expenses during his administration, but he continued to draw for more money from time to time.

When Exall left the mines, he left this letter press copy book there, together with the other papers in the possession, I suppose, of Granger. He went to New York and undertook to get the company to advance more money. He claimed that there was about $5,400 of salary due him and $2,600 due to Granger. He had two objects in view; I have no doubt of that. First, he wanted to get the money for his salary and Granger's, and after getting the money, he then wanted to disgust the company with the mines so that he could denounce them and take possession of them.

Mr. GEORGE. Who was that?

Mr. VEST. Exall, the third superintendent. As the testimony shows, he is dead and, as a matter of course, I have no disposition to say anything harsh of him, but the most charitable construction is that he was looking out for himself and himself alone. Mr. Slaughter, under his contract with the Mexican Government of 10 per cent of what he might defeat of this award, employed a man who had testified in the case on the part of the company named Green, who had a claim before the Commission which was defeated. He lived a long time in Mexico and he was denounced by the Mexican lawyer before the Commission, who speaks of him in the most slighting terms as "the defender of Mexico." Green claimed that he spoke the Mexican language and sided with the Liberals in their contest with the French and that he could go all over Mexico with impunity, that he shared the secrets of the people and that they had no prejudice against him.

The lawyer for Mexico, in speaking of this same man, ridiculed him and his claim, and spoke of him in the language I quote now, and I know that I quote it correctly, as "the defender of Mexico." This man turns up, as all such characters do, in the nick of time. Slaughter was looking out for testimony to do away with this award, and he met Green. They went into a saloon here and took a drink, and he asked Green if he knew anything about the affairs of the La Abra Company. "Everything," says Green, "everything. What I do not know you could put in a primer." He knew it all. Slaughter then employed him. Slaughter was to pay his expenses to Mexico, and then the Mexican Government, under this written contract, paid the balance of his expenses, and gave him all facilities to obtain this testimony. He went up to Tayoltita, and obtained from Granger or somebody else this letter-press book which was left there.

Mr. GEORGE. The copy book of the company?

Mr. VEST. The copy book of the company, and brought that back.

Mr. MORGAN. Is is the right book, though?

Mr. VEST. I am glad the Senator is satisfied with it. He got the letterpress book, which is brought in here now as the basis of this new proceeding in the Court of Claims. It is the same book that was before the House committee and that was here in the Senate when we discussed the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, just there that he will probably remember that the authenticity of this book was disputed before the Senate at the time the treaty was under consideration. Gen. Logan particularly disputed it and said it was a forgery, and found a good many objections and exceptions to pages that had been cut out of the book that belonged in one place and another. The Senator will remember that. That led to the resolution under which the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations made this investigation. It was supposed to be best to remove all doubt upon the question as to the authenticity of that book, and that it should be produced before that committee, and witnesses who knew all about it should be called to testify in regard to it, and so De Lagnel came and other witnesses.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask whether a proper explanation was made of the cut-out leaves?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; entirely.

Mr. DOLPH. They were copies of letters that had been written elsewhere and pasted in the book.

Mr. MORGAN. I said "cut out" when I meant "put in."

Mr. DOLPH. And there were letters written at Tayoltita and other places.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to know whether that book contained the confidential correspondence between the agents there and the officers of the company here?

Mr. VEST. "Officers of the company here?"

Mr. MORGAN. In New York. That is exactly what it contained—the full correspondence of that company with the home office.

Mr. DOLPH. That is, copies of all letters written at the mines?

Mr. MORGAN. All the letters written at the mines were sent here, but when we wanted to get the letters sent from New York in reply, we could not find them. We searched the whole city of New York, but never could find anything at all. The secretary of the company was here, but we could not get them.

Mr. VEST. All I want is the truth to come out before the Senate. The evidence in regard to the books in New York, so far as Mr. Garth is concerned, and I have read all his testimony, was to the effect that they were kept by the secretary of the company, a Mr. Worthington, who is also dead. These books were deposited in a certain place. Mr. Garth swore he had not seen them; that it was not his business to keep them. What Worthington did with them nobody knows. It was just one of the ordinary occurrences in regard to a bankrupt company. The stockholders of the company had become disgusted, the enterprise was a failure, and they did not propose to put any more money in it. Every Senator on this floor is experienced in transactions of that sort, old lawsuits and old speculations, and knows what always becomes of the papers and books in such cases.

Mr. GEORGE. The idea is that the thing just went out of existence as being worthless.

Mr. VEST. The evidence shows that.

Mr. MORGAN. Except that there were a number of judgments against that corporation in New York.

Mr. VEST. I suppose there are a number of judgments. Mr. John H. Garth brought suit against the company in order to make the other stockholders pay their pro rata share. Is there anything singular about that? The books were lost, but the evidence is that they were not destroyed for any purpose of suppressing the testimony. They were gone.

Mr. GEORGE. Is Worthington still living?

Mr. VEST. He is dead. The last that was ever seen of these books they were in his posession. He kept them in a little room in a certain place together with other papers of the firm of Garth & Co., a banking house there. Mr. Garth, who was a banker and broker in the city of New York, was formerly a large tobacco man in the city of Richmond, Va., and moved to my State of Missouri. I knew him very well. Mr. Garth testified that after Exall came and made his report that he had been imprisoned in Mexico and driven out of the country, and De Lagnel said there must be experts sent there and more money spent in order to get anything to reduce these ores, he became disgusted, as any business man would under the circumstances, and let the whole thing go. Whose interest was it to keep these books, or whose interest was it to destroy them?

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me? Will he explain how that book was used?

Mr. VEST. My recollection is it was brought by Slaughter's agent, Green, who had been employed by Slaughter.

Mr. GEORGE. Can the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] explain how that was?

Mr. MORGAN. It is not a point of any particular consequence, inasmuch as the authenticity of the book was established, as to how Mexico got it, but my recollection is that a man named Granger, who was in the employment of the La Abra Company, was left out there by De Lagnel and Exall in charge of the property of the company.

Mr. DOLPH. Exall turned the mine over by written order.

Mr. VEST. I object to the Senators now making an argument with each other. I have spoken of that myself, and here is the letter.

Mr. MORGAN. I was asked a question.

Mr. VEST. I do not object to the Senator's answering a question, but I object to his colleague on the committee interjecting an argument here.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very much obliged to him for correcting me.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, I have no objection to the Senator answering an inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. This man Granger, I understood, married a Mexican woman, the daughter of the justice of the peace about whom the Senator has been speaking, Soto. He remained there and the property was turned over to him by order of the company, and this man Green, as I am informed and believe, went to Granger and got the books from him. That is how it happened.

Mr. VEST. I supposed so and I stated so. I know nothing about it, but I infer that after Granger married this Mexican woman, Soto's daughter, Soto being in the conspiracy, as I believe, to denounce these mines (which is the Mexican proceeding to take possession of an abandoned mine), after Granger had married Soto's daughter, he betrayed the trust Exall had put in him, and I have no doubt he got the best price he could, contingent upon the result of this matter, for delivering up these books. That is the whole of it.

The testimony shows that Exall was in negotiation with a detective named Fisher, who was employed by Mr. Robert T. Lyons, the attorney of the Mexican Government, who admitted the fact. This detective had an appointment to meet the Mexican minister in the city of New York in regard to this matter, and the minister of this great Government, bearing the insignia of its nationality to foreign countries, was there to meet a common detective, for what purpose? To negotiate a transaction with this same Mr. Exall for $25,000 to get possession of the books. That is the evidence here which is undisputed. I will repeat it. The Mexican minister was negotiating through a detective with this man Exall, who had gone to New York to try to get more money from the company, but could not, to pay Mr. Exall the price he demanded of $25,000 for these same books and papers.

Mr. GEORGE. The letterpress copy books?

Mr. VEST. Yes, the letterpress copy books and everything he could get his hands on. He failed to bleed the other side for any more and he proposed to bleed Mexico. Mexico was willing to pay for anything that was worth the money, but the Mexican minister wanted to know what he was going to pay for. "Barkis was willin'," but Barkis wanted to see what there was to be bought.

Mr. GEORGE. He wanted to look at the goods.

Mr. VEST. Yes, he wanted to look at the goods. It appears that the detective, Fisher, wrote a letter to Exall, in which he said to Exall, "I want you to call on me to have this matter settled, because the Mexican minister is coming from Washington"—that is the substance of it—"and I want to know in regard to the matter before I meet him."

Now, to summarize this testimony—for I am weary and the Senate of course is—these letterpress books show this, and I am willing for them to have their full effect. The letters between Exall, the last superintendent before the catstrophe when the mines were abandoned, and David J. Garth, the treasurer of the company in New York, were all essentially to one effect, "more money, more money," in order to carry on the mines in the proper way. Garth's replies to him were all to the effect, "no more money; you must run the mines on the proceeds of the ore." One thing is to be said, that he left no debts behind him or, if so, to a very inconsiderable amount, two hundred or three hundred dollars. Exall was accused by the Mexicans of having wasted the proceeds of the ore of the mines in gambling and other debauchery. Whether that is true or not of course is a matter of conjecture; but the whole tenor of the correspondence, which I have not the time to read, was simply the demand for more money from Exall and the refusal by Garth.

The question in issue was, did Exall leave that mine because the enterprise had failed as a venture, or was he compelled to leave it by the hostility of Mexican citizens and officials? The testimony shows here—I have not the time to read it, but I will ask to insert portions of it in the RECORD showing my assertion to be true—that he was annoyed and harassed by the Mexican officials and by the Mexican people. That he intended or expected to get more money from Garth is beyond question, but suddenly in the spring of 1868 he left Tayoltita, went down to Mazatlan, and sailed from there to New York, going through to California. When he arrived in the city of New York the testimony shows that he called upon Garth. Garth says he told him—and Exall swears to the same thing—that he had been driven out by the Mexican authorities.

The testimony shows that Olivera, who was the official successor of Perez as the political officer of the district, told this man Exall that if he did not leave that country he would be killed. Exall swears that he was afraid to remain there. After he got to the city of New York he found he could not get the money to pay these salaries—five thousand four hundred and odd dollars to himself and $2,600 to his colleague and associate, Mr. Granger. He then inaugurated another scheme, that is developed by his letter from New York of May 8, 1868, to Mr. Granger. I will insert it in the RECORD (see Appendix A), but the substance of it is this: Exall writes to Granger that he had got to New York, that he could not squeeze the stockholders for another dollar, and he says, "Now I have got a plan on hand to make some money for you and myself. These men are disgusted with this enterprise and propose to abandon it. Now, you hold the mines secure, if you can, and I will try to sell them here to somebody else, but we together will become the residuary legatees of the affairs of the La Abra Company and make a fortune for ourselves."

Here are letters to Granger showing that beyond any sort of question. He says to Granger "do not let anybody see the books"—he and Granger had kept the books, but what those books were he does not specify—"do not let anybody see the books for reasons which you will understand." Afterwards, just before this man's death, when he was confronted with this letterpress book which was antagonistic and contradictory to his letters written to Garth in New York, in which he said to Garth "there is no trouble about the title to the mines, or about the authorities, all we want is money," he was asked how he wrote those letters and at the same time swore differently in his testimony before the commission.

Mr. GEORGE. Who made that statement?

Mr. VEST. Exall. His statement is here in evidence, and I will ask to have it inserted in the RECORD, in which he explains by saying, "I was satisfied from the condition of things there, from what Olivera and others told me, that I could not stay in that country. I determined to disgust the stockholders in New York with their venture and make them abandon the mines so that I could make something out of them. I wrote discouraging accounts to New York and called for more money, although Garth told me before I left for New York that he would not put up any more money." He drew upon Garth for $3,000 in one draft, which was not paid.

He says here in one of his letters to Garth that the Bank of California is about to denounce the mines, about to seize them for debt, and that the banking firm of Echenique, Peña & Co., of Mazatlan, were about to institute attachment proceedings in a Mexican court. In his letter to Granger from New York, as it showed upon its face, he says, "Pay no attention to the Bank of California; pay no attention to the draft for $5,000," which had been drawn by De Lagnel and never paid; "hold the mines," "hold the mines"—these worthless mines which were abandoned by the company because there was nothing in them worth having!

Though in my limited time here it is impossible for me to read all the testimony, it convinces me absolutely that this man betrayed his employers and had two objects in view: One was to secure his salary and the other was to get possession, ultimately, of the mines in order to work them.

Mr. GEORGE. He is the writer of the letters.

Mr. VEST. He is the writer of the letters, in which he continually asks, like the daughters of the horse-leech, "More, more, more!" He never received one dollar from New York during his administration, but $60,000 was paid under the administration of De Lagnel, and then the resources of the company were exhausted. Garth said to him that he did not propose to put up any more money, and he writes to him, "If that thing is a failure the sooner we know it the better."

But, as I say, this man Exall—and his letters show it—was intent upon two things: First, to get his money out of the company; and next, to disgust them with the property so that they would abandon it, and he could denounce it under the Mexican law with his Mexican associates. The last we heard of that hacienda, with all the money that had been spent there, this fellow Soto, the father-in-law of Granger, who was the clerk of Exall, was in possession, having denounced the property under the Mexican law.

Mr. GEORGE. Did he work the mines?

Mr. VEST. I do not know whether he worked them or not. He had a wine shop there. A good deal of money had been spent there, and the mines were being tunneled at considerable expense by another Mexican. Some of the mines had been abandoned altogether. The La Abra mine was an old Spanish mine, through which you could see daylight. It seems to have been run through a hill, and the pillars that supported the ceiling, under the mining operations, had been cut, and there was a vast amount of débris never worked by this company.

In one of his letters Exall says that just before he left Tayoltita, to go down to Mazatlan, he had picked up some lumps of gold in the La Abra mine; that he had assayed them and they were very rich. As a matter of course it would have taken thousands and thousands of dollars to have transported American machinery and applied it there and put the mines in such condition that dividends could have been secured.

Mr. President, I know in the discussion of this whole matter that great emphasis will be put upon this letterpress book upon the theory already developed in every stage of this case that this was a coolly and boldly concocted scheme to rob Mexico without any basis whatever. The report of the committee shows beyond any doubt that there were mines there, that a large amount of money was expended, that these superintendents reported, as De Lagnel did, that the ore of certain mines was very rich, that this man Exall was enabled for twelve months to pay the expenses of the mines out of the proceeds of them, notwithstanding the disturbed condition of the country, and that Exall left there without any other explanation but that contained in his letter to Granger, which was no explanation at all. I am compelled, he says, by circumstances to go immediately to New York, and he never returned.

Many of the witnesses ard dead and it will never be known with anything like legal accuracy, but my theory of the case is, that while Exall was prosecuting this conspiracy against the company, although he was its superintendent, he became alarmed for his own life because Olivera went to him and told him he would be killed, and he went down to Mazatlan, as he says, with the intention of returning, but he got information there in regard to what was going on or about to go on, and never went back there.

As a matter of course when he got to New York, for he had no other place to go, he went to get more money out of Garth. He could not get it. He then tried to sell this property which did not belong to him to other people. He did not succeed. Pursuing the ordinary course, I will speak of him as gently as I can of all such adventurers, we next find him in negotiations with the Mexican Government to sell the books and papers of the company in order to do away with the award which he himself had sworn was just and right.

Mr. President, I have, greatly to my own satisfaction, only one other thing to say and it is the most serious thing of all for the Senate of the United States to dispose of, and that is as to the power of the legislative department of the Government to send this case to the Court of Claims.

The proceedings originates from an intimation or an opinion from Mr. Evarts, when Secretary of State, that the political department of the Government was unable to investigate the case properly for want of coercive process to compel the attendance of witnesses. All that was ever asked by the State Department was the power to compel the attendance of witnesses so as to arrive at the truth. Mr. Evarts never pretended that there was any other object in view, and he asked Congress to give him the instrumentality. Mr. Evarts himself said, and so did Mr. Bayard, that as to the La Abra case the question was only one of exaggerated damages. They agree with Senator DANIEL in his report in the House of Representatives that the facts did not authorize the reopening of the case as to the question of liability on the part of the Mexican Government.

Mr. GEORGE. There was an act passed.

Mr. VEST. I do not know of any. If the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] knows of one, I do not. I have never heard of any, except that there was a bill introduced by Senator Cameron, the father of the present Senator from Pennsylvania. I think he offered such a bill for the distribution of the award, but it never passed.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly it passed.

Mr. VEST. If it did I do not know it.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course it did; and that is the very proceeding that we are now going on with.

Mr. VEST. Of course that act passed, but I understood the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to ask whether there was an act to distribute the awards to all the claimants.

Mr. GEORGE. Under the treaty there was no provision of that sort.

Mr. MORGAN. No; but the act to carry into effect the treaty required the Secretary of State to pay out the award as the money came in. The Secretary was directed to suspend payment in these two cases of the La Abra Company and Weil on the ground that they were alleged to be fraudulent.

Mr. GEORGE. Did he make partial payment?

Mr. MORGAN. Everything has been paid except these two claims.

Mr. GEORGE. But partial payments were made on these two claims.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. How did he make those partial payments without an act of Congress?

Mr. MORGAN. There is a great deal of history about that. There was a $5,000 fee given to a member of Congress. There are subjects of that sort that might be interesting to go into, but I do not care now to go into that. This case is big enough now without going into the universality of it.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator tell me whether those partial payments were made without any previous act of Congress directing them to be paid?

Mr. MORGAN. They were paid right in the teeth of the act of Congress.

Mr. VEST. I only know what is shown by the papers in the case, and that is, the State Department took the position that Congress had not acted.

Mr. MORGAN. The lobby had been strong enough to get a very large amount of money out of the hands of the State Department.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course I know nothing about the lobby. The Senator may draw his own inference as to that; but I think our lobby will compare very favorably with the arrangement made by Slaughter with the Mexican Government. When it comes to that, I am willing to stand the hazard of the die.

Now I come to the question as to the power of which I spoke. It is argued very fully in the brief of Shellabarger & Wilson, and they cite the authorities. I will ask leave to insert it in my remarks. It is contained in the appendix to the minority report.

Mr. GEORGE. Governor Brown's report?

Mr. VEST. Governor Brown's report, and it seems to me the argument is conclusive that we invade the political domain marked out by the Constitution as belonging to the Executive when we undertake to send this case to a municipal court. It seems to me beyond question that the Supreme Court of the United States in Frelinghuysen vs. Key recognize the point that this was a subject of negotiation between the two countries.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator forgets, I reckon, that there is a case later than that which was made upon a motion for a mandamus in the Supreme Court, and they denied that doctrine.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that the decision in Frelinghuysen vs. Key has ever been overruled.

Mr. MORGAN. No; but there is an additional decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator finds any decision which says that this case can be sent to the Court of Claims I shall be obliged to him to produce it.

Mr. MORGAN. There was nothing in the case that went before the Supreme Court that involved that question, and therefore they could not say anything about it; but they made their decision broad enough to cover this bill, as I think I will demonstrate when I come to that.

Mr. VEST. Very good. I shall be glad to hear the Senator speak upon it. I shall take the position here, and I have no doubt in regard to the correctness of it, until I hear what the Senator has to say, that in passing this bill we invade the province of the Chief Executive, the political department of this Government. Look at the judgment that is to be rendered by this court. What is it? They are to find whether this award, or any portion of it, was obtained by fraud or by false swearing, and if they do so find, what is the result? Then the President is authorized to withhold that portion of the award. Suppose that either party be dissatisfied with the judgment of the Court of Claims, then the case can be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States as any other case, using the language of the bill, in law or in equity.

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States is marked out by the Constitution. We can not enlarge it. We have to determine, if we send this bill on appeal to the Supreme Court, that it is a case in law or equity. How is it a case in law or equity? It is an examination of a trial, a judgment already had for the information of the Executive. If this be a bill in equity or a suit at law, then why does it not have the insignia of such a proceeding and allow the court to determine what the judgment shall be and to enforce it? Why is the language used here, "The President is authorized, if the finding of the court shall be so and so?" Does this come under the constitutional grant of power to the Supreme Court of suits at law or in equity? Is there any pretense that this is an ordinary proceeding such as would be had between John Smith and Thomas Brown before the Court of Claims to be taken under appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. GEORGE. Does the bill provide for a suit in the name of the United States against the La Abra Company?

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes; it provides for a suit to do what? A suit to find out one specific thing, and that is whether another judgment was obtained by fraud or false swearing. Did any lawyer ever hear of that before? What would be thought of an act of Congress that said that a suit between the Senator from Mississippi and myself should be determined in such a way as that? That award was a judgment, and the Supreme Court has decided that such an award passes title to real estate without auxiliary legislation of any sort; and here now we are passing a bill which says a municipal tribunal, after the Senate has refused to give its constitutional sanction to a treaty and after two committees of Congress, one of the Senate and one of the House of Representatives, have reported against it, shall take up an isolated issue and find one way or another, and then on appeal take that emasculated, that hybrid decision, without a name in jurisprudence, without a standing in law or equity, to the highest tribunal in the United States.

Mr. President, I am done.

APPENDIX.

A.

NEW YORK, May 8, 1868.

DEAR GRANGER: Yours from Tayoltita of March 25 reached me day before yesterday. Was much pleased to hear from you and to know that you were getting along in some shape. I wrote you from San Francisco just previous to sailing from this point, giving you a statement of my doings while there; so no need of repetition. As I stated in my letter to you, I came by the Opposition route across the isthmus—Walker's old ground—and while crossing it I can safely say I had the damn'est roughest time imaginable. It was awful low water in the small streams or rivers; heavy rains while on the journey; in water, pushing flats, etc. It was an indescribable mean and rough trip. We were four days getting across; got pretty good sea steamer on this side; twenty-seven days from San Francisco to New York. Of course, on the first day of my arrival here, I saw nothing of the company. The day after I went down and saw Garth. Had a long talk concerning affairs, and, contrary to our expectations, gave me no satisfaction; didn't seem to intend to do anything more.

I have seen him several times, but have got nothing from him of an encouraging nature. He seems disgusted with the enterprise, and, so far as regards himself, intends to do nothing more, or have nothing more to do with it. Well, I then went to one of the stockholders and directors, who talked a little better. It seems there is a party here who has been after Garth, and this stockholder mentioned to sell the mines to a wealthy party who are now successfully mining in California. This party have been after this gentleman repeatedly, endeavoring to get them to sell the mines, etc., they bearing all expense and giving the present company so much stock. This party are not now in New York. One of them has gone to hunt up De Lagnel to get all possible information concerning Tayoltita, etc. In addition the party will pay up all debts against the company.

From what this director tells me, they seem in earnest. They are not aware of my arrival; have been written to informing them of the fact, and I will probably be brought in contact with them before long. Now, as you and I are the principal creditors—I haven't been able to get a cent from them—"the company"—and the thing being in my hands, if this party intend buying, we can and will make a good thing out of it. Those of the company I have seen have turned the affairs over to me; so, in case anything can be done with this party, don't be afraid of your interests—all accounts at the mines are under my control—as yours will be looked to in conjunction with mine. All now depends in what can be done with this party, and more information concerning it I am unable to give until seeing them. I have informed the company that they shall do nothing until you and I were paid, which seemed satisfactory.

This will be mailed by steamer of 11th instant. If you do not hear from me by steamer of 21st, it will be on account of affairs not having been concluded. You may certainly expect a letter by mail of 1st June; hope, previous to that time, that I may have made satisfactory arrangements, etc. Just at this crisis it will be necessary to keep all secure at the mines. In my conversation with these gentlemen I will represent things in a secure state, if possible, get prorogas on mines where times are expiring; keep them secure, if possible, in some way; don't be uneasy or spend a thought on Cullins or Bank of California; find out in a quiet way when and where you may dispose of the remaining property, but do not sell until you hear again from me. I hope to be able to make something for ourselves out of this thing; at present we are in the dark, but I will soon know something definite and will immediately write you. In case this party should purchase I will accompany them to the mines. You can extend Ariza's "Guarismey" privilege "if he wants it" another three, four, or six months; don't extend Guadalupe's more than a month at a time; do the best you can under the circumstances, using your own judgment, being guided to an extent by what I have written.

I am also sorry I sold Green Nelly; I think he is a damn rascal and his company a fizzle. Get the mule, saddle and bridle, and cloths from Green. If the company owe you anything make them pay. Green's draft was refused in 'Frisco and here. I inclose a note to him from the man the draft was drawn on, also one from myelf.

I wish I could send you some means to get along with, knowing you must be having quite a rough time, but am unable. I expect to be paid up here; it's not having been done plays the devil with my arrangements. Since my arrival here the weather has been exceedingly unpleasant; raining nearly all the time. New York is exceedingly dull; business much depressed; the political state of affairs of course has everything to do with it. Johnson is not yet impeached, and heavy odds are bet in Washington against the impeachment.

Many changes have taken place since I was here last. Old friends I left, bookkeepers, clerks, etc., many are now doing business on their own account, but have a hard time of it on account of the state of affairs here. To-morrow I intend to take a run down to old Virginia to see my folks. My mother and a sister are in exceedingly ill health; expect to be gone from here only a few days. I have now written all that bears on the important subject with us. Would write more definite, but, as you see, I am now unable to do so. I will write immediately on receipt of news. Let me hear from you every opportunity, and direct via Acapulco, as they get here sooner than by 'Frisco. I will send this that way. My kind regards to Slone "Manuelitta"—I think that is the way to spell the name—Guadalupe's family generally, Cecilia, and the Tayolititians generally. How are you and Cecilia now? Hoping that this may find you well and getting enough to eat, I remain, as ever, your friend,

CHARLES H. EXALL.

The contents of this keep to yourself.

[Fiftieth Congress, second session. Senate Report 2705, part 2. Views of minority.]

In the Senate of the United States.

March 2, 1889.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Brown, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 2632):

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Testimony of witnesses for the Mexican Government as to the arrest and imprisonment of C. H. Exall, the company's superintendent at the mines.

Refugio Fonseca, examined on behalf of the Mexican Government by Judge Quiroz, at San Dimas, July 22, 1872 (ibid., p. 434), testified that Exall, superintendent of the company's mines, was arrested and imprisoned for three days by Judge Nicanor Perez, and that he did not know whether the said Exall had made any application to the authorities of the State.

N. A. Sloan, whose deposition was taken before Judge Quiroz at Dimas, in behalf of the Mexican Government, on the 9th of October, 1871, testified (ibid., p. 426):

"That the superintendent had been imprisoned without knowing for what; he said that he knew he had been a prisoner in the jail, and that he understood that his imprisonment was because, or, rather, according to what he saw of the affair, it was because the judge went into the hacienda to speak to one of the peons who was at work there, and the superintendent thereupon put him out, from which it resulted that the said judge immediately went to his house and ordered the superintendent to be called before him, when he sent him to prison."

The aforesaid James Granger, in the third of his depositions for the Mexican Government, testified to the arrest and imprisonment of the superintendent as follows (ibid., pp. 434, 435):

"Being asked what he knew about the imprisonment of the superintendent of the mining establishment of Tayoltita, what was his name, how long he was imprisoned, by what judge, and what was the result of the application which the latter made to the authorities of the State, he replied that he was a witness to the arrest, and that his name was Charles H. Exall; that he was imprisoned for two or three days because he reproved Judge Nicanor Perez for having removed from one room to another in the establishment of the company, and he knew that the superintendent had complained to the governor of Durango, but that he does not know with what result."

It will be interesting and suggestive to compare the accounts of Exall's arrest and imprisonment given by Granger in his depositions on behalf of the Mexican Government with his account of the same occurrence in his earlier deposition on behalf of the company; but before quoting from these, it may be proper to quote what is said on this subject in the majority report of the committee (p. 12):

"One of the specific acts alleged to establish the charge of hostility on the part of the Mexican authorities is the imprisonment of the superintendent, Exall. In his deposition before the Commission Exall states that he was arrested by the local judge; that without any form of trial or knowledge of his offense he was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, fined $50, and thrust into prison.

"In a letter which Exall wrote to the prefect at San Dimas, the official superior of the local judge, a copy of which is found in the letter book, all the details as to the causes of the arrest are set forth. His own account as there given contradicts his deposition, and shows that his detention must have been of a trival character. The evidence does not show that he was actually imprisoned. It was an arrest under which he was detained for an hour or so, and was not of sufficient consequence to be mentioned in his correspondence with the New York office, and does not appear to have interfered with his duties as superintendent."

An examination of Exall's letter to the prefect at San Dimas, written from Tayoltita January 7, 1868 (about two months before the abandonment of the mines), shows that Exall was still under arrest when he made this appeal for protection. The letter was written on the same day that the arrest was made. In this letter, after detailing the circumstances minutely, Exall says:

"I asked if he intended putting me in jail please to do so, as I had a headache, and wished to lie down. He then gave me permission to go to the hacienda, but to consider myself still his prisoner, and (to be) at his house whenever ordered. * * * But for being a prisoner I would come and see you in reference to the matter, but unfortunately necessity compels me to write." (Appendix, pp. 316, 317.)

It is evident that this letter was not intended to describe and could not possibly have described the duration of the imprisonment. The letter was an appeal for release from illegal detention then existing, and which had already lasted more than "an hour or so." Exall was evidently anxious, and with good reason, to find out how much longer he was likely to be kept in duress. When the isolation of that mining district is considered and the inflammable character of the population the circumstances attending the superintendent's arrest are worthy of the careful attention of Senators who may have to act in this case. The deed was evidently done to humiliate the superintendent publicly and to magnify the local magistrate's power. This appears from the following passage of Exall's letter, referring to the judge who had made the arrest:

"He had collected around his house a number of men, and in the house preparations had been made as if resistance was expected and force might be required. * * * I asked him if he had gotten through with me, as I desired to return to the hacienda. He replied, yes, he had finished. Mr. Sloane and I then left and bid him good-bye. As we reached the corridor he said he never wanted to see me in his house except on official business. To this I replied, 'Very well, sir,' and turned to leave. He called me back, saying not to go; if I did he would send a force after me, and they would shoot, and insisted on my returning to the house. I did so, without any remark. He then said I was his prisoner. I then requested to know what was to be done. He said he would put me in jail until he could receive instructions from San Dimas. I remained passive, and he then gave full license to his tongue, abusing me in the most violent language." (Appendix, p. 316.)

The effect of such an exhibition of arbitrary power as this among such a population can readily be imagined. What happened afterwards appears from the testimony; and the first thing to be noted is that the prefect did not interfere on Exall's behalf. Just how long he was imprisoned seems to be a matter of some doubt. The Mexican commissioner, Zamacona, in his opinion upon La Abra claim, says that "it is proved by the statements of four unimpeachable witnesses" that Superintendent Exall's imprisonment "only lasted four days." (Ex. Doc. No. 103, H. R., Forty-eighth Congress, first session, p. 40.)

What happened after his fruitless appeal to the prefect is thus related by James Granger in his deposition for the company, made at Mazatlan before the United States commercial agent May 14, 1870 (Appendix, p. 354):

"In the month of December, 1867, or January, 1868, the superintendent, Charles H. Exall, was arrested and imprisoned by the 'juez conciliador' of Tayoltita, Nicanor Perez, on a mere pretext, without any reasonable cause whatever. The particulars are as follows: Mr. Exall was occupied in a private room and in private conversation, and while so engaged said juez, or judge, Perez, entered the store at the hacienda, and without speaking or asking permission he passed into a private storeroom adjoining, and Mr. Exall, observing this, stepped to the door of said storeroom and in a polite manner addressed said Perez, saying that no one was allowed to enter said storerooms without license, and if he had any business to please communicate the same to him. Said Perez came out of said storeroom in a great rage and asked Mr. Exall if he thought he, Perez, was a thief, or wanted to steal anything. Mr. Exall denied any such idea, and stated that in requesting him to leave the private storeroom he was merely carrying out the general rules of the company.

"Said Perez would listen to no explanations, and when he went out remarked that he, Exall, should hear from him. About half an hour after, an order came to the hacienda for Mr. Exall to attend, forthwith, before the said juez, or judge, Perez, which order Mr. Exall obeyed, and upon entering said court room said Judge Perez commenced a tirade of the most infamous personal abuse of said Exall, without allowing explanation or justification, sentenced said Exall to pay a fine of, I think, about $50, and imprisonment for two months.

"Exall was confined in the hacienda until the next morning, when he was sent for by said 'juez,' who did lock up said Exall in an old empty house, with the declared intention of sending him to San Dimas to complete his sentence. Said judge remarked, at the same time, that he could not permit Exall to ride even his own mule to San Dimas; that he should treat him the same as he would treat any common prisoner.

"When I went to visit said Exall in his prison, the next morning, I found him busily engaged in killing fleas that were troubling him. It was a filthy place. By personal influences I brought to bear, and by securing the payment of the fine imposed upon him, I managed to get Mr. Exall released. All the above I witnessed myself.

"A few weeks after this occurrence, on a Saturday, the superintendent, Exall received from said Judge Perez an order directing him to attend at his 'juezgado' (court room), and the same evening at seven (7) o'clock, Mr. Exall, in obedience to said order, went to the court room, where he found assembled a large number of the employés of La Abra Company's mines, and others, and in their presence the judge proceeded to lecture said Exall upon the manner in which the business of said company should be carried on, and he threatened that if the superintendent of the company did not work in the mode and manner to please the authorities they should be deprived of their property, and forced to flee the country; all of which was said in my hearing, and although I have only stated a few circumstances that came under my direct observation, showing the animus of the authorities and people of this district, these are not by any means to be taken as all that took place, nor even as the most vexatious. It was the daily and almost hourly annoyances and interruptions. Every pretext that could, by any means, be made the basis of a suit or exaction was availed of."

Exall's own account of his arrest and imprisonment as given in his deposition on behalf of the company, before Mr. Justice Barnard, of the supreme court of New York, December 2, 1869, is as follows (ibid., p. 337):

"The civil officers of the legitimate Government of Mexico under President Juarez also harassed and annoyed us, and interfered with the continuing of the mining operations of said company. I was arrested by the order of the local magistrate or judge of Tayoltita, whose official title, as I understood, was 'juez,' and thrust into prison and sentenced by him to a fine of $50 and imprisonment for two months. I had no trial, nor even an examination, except by him personally, and do not know for what I was arrested or imprisoned; but I here state positively that I had not committed any act, crime, or offense against the laws or people of Mexico, or any citizen or soldier of the same, nor against any of the authorities, local or national.

"I was released through the personal influence of a Mr. Granger, who had to promise payment of the said fine; no good reason ever having been given me for my arrest or release. I had frequently applied to the proper military and civil authorities of Mexico, both in Sinaloa and Durango, for redress and protection against the violence stated, but was rudely denied by both in every case, and could get neither; and these threatened acts, and the acts of violence, were encouraged and connived at by said authorities, if not actually instigated by them, which last I believe to be the fact also. By reason of these facts it was very difficult to keep men there at work, and the prosecution of the work was greatly hindered and delayed, and it finally became utterly impossible to continue the mining operations of the company; and I was compelled, with my men, to give up the same entirely, and to abandon the mines and all the mining implements and property of the company, to save our lives."

It does not appear to the undersigned that there is any conflict whatever, as suggested in the majority report, between the letter which Exall wrote on the day he was arrested, to the prefect, at San Dimas, and the foregoing account extracted from his deposition. Nor will it be now contended by members of the committee, in view of the statement of the Mexican commissioner, Zamacona, and the testimony of Mexican witnesses, that "the evidence does not show that he (Exall) was actually imprisoned," or that the detention was "of a trivial character"—only "an hour or so"—and "not of sufficient consequence to be mentioned in his correspondence with the New York office."

If the letterpress copy book contains all his correspondence with the New York office, Exall only wrote one letter, as superintendent, after his release from confinement at Tayoltita, and that was written to Mr. Garth on the 24th of January, 1868, at Mazatlan. There may have been a reason why Exall did not allude to his imprisonment in that letter, but the reason was not the one suggested in the majority report of the committee, if an affidavit which Exall made shortly before his death (Appendix, pp. 943-945), and to which the majority report makes no allusion whatever, is to be credited. That affidavit undertakes to explain certain discrepancies between some of his later letters as superintendent and the depositions which he subsequently made in support of the company's claim before the joint commission. This antemortem affidavit of his will be further considered hereafter, in connection with his letters as they appear in the company's letterpress copy book.

Before leaving the subject of his arrest and imprisonment, it may be well to add an account of the affair given by another eyewitness—John P. Cryder—in a deposition on behalf of the company (ibid., pp. 374, 375):

"I was, myself, a witness to an outrage upon the superintendent of that company, Mr. Charles H. Exall, who was, to my own knowledge, improperly and unlawfully arrested and imprisoned by the local judge, or 'juez' at Tayoltita. I was present when said arrest was made, and I was also present at the hacienda of said La Abra Company when the cause or excuse was given, which appeared to me like a miserable pretext for said arrest. It was this: Said Superintendent Exall was sitting in his private room at the hacienda, in consultation with some man on private business, when the said 'juez' walked into an adjoining private storeroom, without knocking or being invited in, and Mr. Exall remarked to said 'juez' that it was his private storeroom, and if he, the 'juez,' wished to see him on business, he, Exall, would go out and see him, or words to this effect.

"These remarks were made in a pleasant and gentlemanly manner, which should have given no offense to any reasonable man, but said 'juez' remarked that his dignity was insulted, or something to that effect, and that he would have satisfaction, or that he, Exall, would hear from him; and about half an hour after the occurrence named I saw an armed guard come with the orders of said judge, or 'juez,' and arrested Superintendent Exall, and took him before the judge.

"I followed him, and I heard the said local judge, Nicanor Perez, order said Superintendent Exall to be imprisoned in the hacienda that night, with a guard over him; and said judge sent for said Exall the next morning to appear before him, which he did, in charge of a guard, and the moment he entered the court room I heard the said judge call him, Exall, very bad names, and he poured out upon him the most vile epithets in the Spanish language, abusing him in the most shameful manner; all of which Mr. Exall seemed to bear without losing his temper; and said judge, after he had exhausted the vocabulary of abusive epithets, as I thought, then turned to said Exall and announced his determination to carry out the sentence of imprisonment for two months in the common jail at San Dimas, and $50 fine, but at the same time ordered the guard to compel said Exall to go all the way to San Dimas on foot, and not to allow him even to ride his own mule, saying the judge would learn the Gringos (as Americans are called) to treat him with deference and respect.

"He then ordered said Exall to be locked up that night in Tayoltita in an old uninhabited house that was said to have been occupied by diseased persons. It did seem to me that nothing was too bad for said judge to say and do against said Exall. The next morning I visited said Exall, in company with an Englishman, whose name was James Granger. This Mr. Granger not being an American but an Englishman, had some influence with Judge Perez, although he was in the employ of the company, and he was permitted to call on the prisoner. He invited me to go with him, and I did so; we found Mr. Exall, a gentleman of refinement, busily engaged in the work of defending himself from the attacks of millions of fleas. The house where he was confined had a most disgusting smell, and was filthy beyond description.

"It was said by the people there that this old house had been but recently occupied by persons of loathsome diseases, and that the judge knew this fact when he sent Mr. Exall there.

"This seemed to create so much sympathy and feeling at Tayoltita in favor of Mr. Exall, even with those natives and unemployed workmen who were in favor of driving said company away from the country, that Mr. Granger managed, with some influences unknown to me, and by securing the payment of the fine, to get Mr. Exall released from this vile prison house; and I do not know what became of the case after that."

Taking all the testimony on this subject together—what was offered on behalf of the Mexican Government and what was offered by the company in the depositions from which the foregoing extracts have been made—it appears beyond question that the local judge publicly and unlawfully invaded the personal liberty of the company's superintendent and insulted and humbled him—made a spectacle of him—in the presence of the people who worked in the mines, as well as of those who were dissatisfied because he did not employ them, and afterwards imprisoned him for several days in a filthy hut. He did not owe his release from this pesthouse to the interference of the local judge's superior, to whom he had appealed in writing, but to the efforts of one of his own subordinates, a British subject, whose relations to the "juez conciliador" of Tayoltita, Guadalupe Soto, appear in the testimony.

It will also have been noticed that the same magistrate, Perez, as stated in the foregoing extract from Granger's deposition, made another exhibition of his hostility "a few weeks afterwards" (which would be in February, 1868), and threatened "in presence of a large number of the employés of La Abra Company's mines" that the company "should be deprived of their property and forced to flee the country if the superintendent or company did not work in the mode and manner to please the authorities."

The interference of the local authorities with the company examined.

In the majority report of the committee it is held that the interference of the local authorities with the working of the company's mines was in accordance with Mexican law and was exercised with a proper regard for the welfare of the miners. On page 12 the committee say:

"The action of the local officials, Mora and Soto, is relied upon by the claimants to establish interference by the authorities in the working of the mines, and their orders to the superintendent were produced before the commission. These orders show upon their face that they were occasioned by an alleged failure of the superintendent to observe his contract with the miners, by which they were to be paid two-thirds of their wages in goods from the company's store and one-third in cash. The failure to make the cash payment led to the interference of the local magistrate, which was authorized by the Mexican mining laws."

The orders of the prefect, Mora, at San Dimas, and of the local judge, Soto, at Tayoltita, are printed on page 360 of the appendix. The order issued on the 4th of July, 1867, by Judge Soto, is as follows:

Second court—Conciliador, Tayoltita.

To the Superintendent of the Abra Reducing Works:

By the communication of yesterday, dated the 3d, received from the gefe politico of San Dimas, I notify you that if you do not intend to work the Abra mines as they were formerly worked, upon the system of thirds, that you immediately vacate the mines, to allow the operatives to work them on their own account, without further loss of time.

Liberty and reform.

TAYOLTITA, July 4, 1867.

GUADALUPE SOTO.

A later order issued by the prefect was in the following terms:

Gefetura politico of San Dimas.

To the Representative of the Mines, Tayoltita:

The gefetura, being informed that you have stopped the mines in that mineral, informs you that this is not the engagement you entered into with me, and that it hence believes that you place no value upon your word. Nevertheless, if you don't choose to continue your work, give the people permission to collect ores in the mines, as I will not hold myself responsible for the consequences in a town where the people are without work.

Independence and reform.

SAN DIMAS, July 10, 1867.

These orders have not been defended either by the authorities who made them, or by the Mexican Commissioner Zamacona, in his opinion against the claim of La Abra Company, upon the ground taken by the committee; that is, that they were lawful. As already noticed, Judge Soto, in his deposition on behalf of the Mexican Government, stated that he issued his order because he was compelled to do so by an uprising of the people, and because of instructions he had received from his superior officer, the prefect at San Dimas. It would indeed be a strange law that would authorize a justice of the peace to say to a mining company: "You are ordered to arrange your work with the operatives within two hours; and if you come to no arrangement, you will vacate the mines."

Nor did the prosecuting attorney at Durango, who conducted the taking of defensive testimony for the Mexican Government, seem to regard these official orders as they have been regarded by the committee. He seems to have been afraid that they would tend "to fix the responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government," and so, in his instructions to the court of first instance at San Dimas, he said: "It is of great importance that C. Marcos Mora, who was the judicial authority of that district, and Guadalupe Soto, who was judge at Tayoltita, be examined, in order that they may state whether they have dictated and issued the communications, a copy of which accompanies this" (ibid., p. 429).

Soto was examined, with the result which has been noted. But Mora was never examined, although it is in evidence that he was accessible, doubtless because Soto's examination made it clear that the orders were issued and that further inquiry would only "make bad worse" for the Mexican Government.

The method by which the authorities could legally intervene in case of difficulties between the miners and their employers was stated to the subcommittee by Capt. Charles B. Dahlgren, a witness produced on behalf of the Mexican Government, who had been superintendent of the Durango Mining Company at San Dimas from 1870 to 1875. The examination on that subject was as follows (ibid., p. 683):

"Q. Suppose a contract existed between a mining company and the miners, that they would pay the miners two-thirds in goods, supplies from the store, and one-third in cash, and the company attempted to pay all in goods or reduced the amount of the cash payment, would the authorities exercise the right to interfere to protect the miners?

"A. In case it had been an agreement between the parties?

"Q. Yes.

"A. The authorities would hold you to the contract.

"By Mr. LINES:

"Q. In what way; what would be the form of the interference by the authorities?

"A. It would be by putting in an interventor, a government official, to see, not to direct your workings of the mine, but that the legal agreement was carried out.

"Q. He would supervise the distribution of the proceeds?

"A. The distribution of the proceeds, but not the working of the mines?

"Q. There would not be any lawsuit about it in the ordinary American sense of the term?

"A. There would be certain formalities in the court by which the judge would appoint an interventor. That man would come down to us and present his credentials. The man would have quarters at the hacienda. He would have a right to examine the proceeds of the silver and the books, and see what your debts were; first, that the men were paid, and then that the merchants were paid, and the distribution made according to the agreement between the operatives and the mine."

It appears that there never was any such intervention in this case, for the very good reason that the La Abra Company never broke any of its contracts with its miners. This is shown by the testimony of another witness produced on behalf of the Mexican Government, Mr. A. B. Elder, who entered the employment of the company in the spring or early summer of 1866 and remained at Tayoltita until the fall of 1867. He was in charge of the company's reducing works when the aforesaid orders were issued. Various questions were put to Mr. Elder on this subject by the chairman of the subcommittee bearing upon some possible justification or excuse for these orders (ibid., pp. 600-604).

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Now, Mr. Elder, I will ask you a question. Is it the custom of the Mexican civil authorities, enforced through the alcalde, to take supervision of the relation between mining companies and Mexican operatives in Mexico, so as to see that the operatives are paid what the miners or the mining companies agree to pay?

"A. Yes; they do that.

"Q. That is a matter of legal administration in Mexico?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. For the purpose of preserving the miners in their rights as against their employers?

"A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Now, if you, in Mexico, desired and needed a peon or miner whom you found to be in the employment of another man or another company, I suppose your first inquiry would be how much debt he owes to his employer?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. After getting his consent to go with you in place of remaining with the other person, then you would assume that debt, under an agreement with the former employer, you and he agreeing upon what would be a fair living to the Mexican while he was in your service, and the surplus over that living while in your service would go to the extinguishment of that debt?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And so if you desired to transfer that same man to another person you would make the same arrangement?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. So that the debt always follows the man along, and is a sort of mortgage lien upon his service after his living, as agreed upon between the employers, is taken out?

"A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. Do you say that these orders that I have referred to were addressed to Mr. Exall because his miners owed anybody else money?

"A. No.

"Q. Did you ever examine the Mexican law on that subject?

"A. I never did.

* * * * * * *

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Now, suppose the second employer, the one who takes him with a mortgage upon his labor, fails to provide for him that sort of living, is the practice in Mexico for the alcaldes to interfere and compel the second employer to live up to his contract and to provide the man with food, raiment, and whatever it is that he has agreed to furnish to the laborer?

"A. I never saw an instance of that kind, where they attempted to make a man furnish it. You remember it is customary for most every mining company to keep supplies such as men use, corn, beans, rice, sugar, tobacco, calicoes, etc., which they take out every Saturday or Sunday before commencing work on Monday, for whatever they have done for the week prior.

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. Did you ever hear of any miner that was in the employ of La Abra Company—I mean the workmen to whom the company owed anything—failing to get supplies at the store?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. How far was the store from the mill?

"A. About 300 feet.

* * * * * * *

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Now, before you answer this, I desire to recall your attention to another matter about which you have been speaking. Did you hear of any complaint of La Abra Company's employés in regard to their payment; whether it should be in money or in goods at the store, or in supplies?

"A. At one time there was something of a jangle among the men, that the amount of cash had been reduced and a greater percentage of goods was paid. It was not anything that attracted any great attention. I paid very little attention to it, but I heard it talked of.

"Q. Do you recollect whether the alcalde there interfered to look into that matter to correct it if it was presented by the operators?

"A. It was referred to the alcalde, but it was talked over with the superintendent.

"Q. Now, is that a subject which you understood was within the jurisdiction of the alcalde?

"A. I have always understood that to be within the jurisdiction of the alcalde.

* * * * * * *

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. Mr. Elder, is not it a matter of contract between the mining superintendent and the men what proportion of their wages shall be paid in supplies and what in money?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, give us your own experience in that matter, when you were a miner at La Puerta, and tell us whether you did not sometimes pay your men all money and at other times part in supplies and at other times a different proportion in supplies and money?"

"A. Yes, sir; that was very often the case. We sometimes paid them three-fourths money.

"Q. And would it not only be when a contract that had been made between the mining superintendent and his men was violated that the justice of the peace would interfere?"

"A. That was when the justice interfered; never at other times."

It appears from the testimony that laborers had flocked to Tayoltita far in excess of the number that could be advantageously employed by that company. These unemployed workmen were a very dangerous element in that sparsely populated region, and it appears that instead of advising them to go elsewhere, the local judge, who kept a wine shop, in which the laborers drank and gambled, took sides with them, and insisted that the company should employ the whole unemployed population. Although Mr. Elder was a willing witness for the Mexican Government, he indicated the real reason for the orders in question as follows (ibid., p. 565):

"Q. Do you know anything of the troubles that occurred between the superintendent of La Abra mines and the authorities about July, 1867; if so, state what you know in regard to it?

"A. Yes; they served a notice on the company that they wanted them to work more men; that they wanted them to put more work on the various mines."

This is brought out more clearly in a deposition made on behalf of the company by Matias Avalos, a Mexican who had been in its employ as a packer, and for whose honesty, truthfulness, and intelligence Capt. Charles B. Dahlgreen, a witness for the Mexican Government before the subcommittee, vouched in the strongest terms. Avalos testified as follows:

"At another time—I think in the month of July, 1867, when I was engaged in bringing down from the mines to the hacienda the ore belonging to the La Abra Company—I met all the Barreteros and men employed in and about the mines going down to the hacienda, and the Barreteros and all the other men stopped and talked with me, and they all said an order had been sent up to the mines by Marcos Mora, gefe politico of that district, to stop work, and ordering them all to Tayoltita.

"When I came down to the town, in the evening, the gefe was at the house of Guadalupe Soto, and I heard the gefe, Marcos Mora, tell these men, a very large crowd of them, that the company did not work as he, the gefe, wanted them to work, and employ all the men who were out of work at Tayoltita, and that he would not let any of them work if they did not employ all of them, and work all their mines at the same time, as he had directed them to work; and he said at the same time that he was going to take the mines away from the company and give them to all of the people, to work them as they pleased; and that night, I remember well, I did not sleep at all, for the words used by the gefe politico to the crowd of miners were well intended and had the effect to incite the Mexican miners and men out of employment to riot, and perhaps to something much worse than that, and I expected serious trouble that night for the company.

"I do not know how the company settled the matter, or how it was that 'La Abra Company' stayed in the district as long as they did after that affair, for I knew the authorities were determined to get rid of them, from all I could hear whispered about by Mexicans out of employment, who seemed to be in with the gefe and juez in getting the company out. I know these troubles went on from time to time until the spring of the year 1868, when the superintendent, Exall, abandoned all the mines and the hacienda and metals and stamp mill, and everything they had there, and the company has never been there or done any work in San Dimas district since that time."

Capt. Dahlgren's estimate of the character of Avalos will be found in the appendix, page 667, 711. Avalos made a second deposition on behalf of the company, in which he stated that Quiros, the judge at San Dimas, sent for him to give a deposition before him the previous summer in connection with this case, and notified him that if he did not go to court and give evidence against the Abra Mining Company he would fine him $100 and otherwise punish him. He further stated that he went to court, and there found a multitude of natives of the country armed, and some of them threatened him with violence because the judge told them that he had given a deposition in favor of the company and against Mexico; also that the judge wrote a deposition for him to sign, a part of which was not true, and that he supposed that that paper went as his deposition, but he did not consider it as any evidence of his in the case (ibid., p. 409).

New evidence in regard to the justice of the peace at Tayoltita.

A most remarkable disclosure in regard to Guadalupe Soto, local judge at Tayoltita, was made by Col. De Lagnel, who testified on behalf of the Mexican Government, and was the first witness examined by the subcommittee in the investigation recently closed. Col. De Lagnal was the second superintendent of the company at the mines, and acted in that capacity at Tayoltita from the spring of 1866 to the spring or early summer of 1867. He gave the following testimony as to Guadalupe Soto, who was "juez conciliador" or justice of the peace at Tayoltita:

"So far as the Mexican authorities were concerned, when I came in contact with them, they were civil, and I have no reason to recollect anything that was to be found fault with. As to some of the minor authorities, this man Soto, for instance, I must say he was a pernicious man, I thought. But I speak with no personal feeling against him, for I never did anything else but bow to him when I would meet him. He had the only good house upon the land belonging to the company. I never went into his house, but I understood that he sold mescal and wine to the miners and others. It was in the portico of his house that the balls took place every Saturday night when the miners would come down. They would come down on Saturday night, and Saturday night and Sunday night there would be a regular drunken saturnalia. That would begin on Sunday morning with ball and music, and the miners and women assembled, and then it would degenerate into a saturnalia. The blankets would be spread upon the ground and there would be gambling. The great trouble of the place was the presence of the gamblers who came to fleece these miners every pay day, and another trouble was the sale of liquor. I stopped the sale of liquor at the hacienda and turned it over to this man Soto.

"By Senator BROWN:

"Q. What position did he hold?

"A. When I first went there I do not know whether he was in office or not, and I am not certain that he held office during my incumbency. But he was a potent factor, I think, in the way of constantly urging others and exciting bad feelings. That was evident in the conduct of the workmen from time to time, and it was traced to him. When I say traced, I mean that I depend on what I heard from others who brought me information. I did not go into his house and held no intercourse with him except simply to bow to him and speak to him when I would meet him.

"Q. His course seems to have stirred up prejudice against the company?

"A. Yes, sir. He was inimical to the company from the first. The miners were subject to his influence, and they were stirred to a demonstration at one time that I witnessed."

Soto was afterwards justice of the peace at Tayoltita when Exall was superintendent. The "demonstration" to which Col. De Lagnel alluded was afterwards described by him in his testimony before the subcommittee. It seems that when Col. De Lagnel first became superintendent, the laborers' wages were paid half in money and half in goods at the company's store, but subsequently, on account of the reduction of the amount of ready money on hand, they agreed to take two-thirds of their pay in goods and one-third in cash. This, of course, left them less for drinking and gambling, and less to spend in Soto's shop. De Lagnel was notified by Sloan that there was going to be trouble the next day when the men assembled, for they understood that the superintendent would not be able to pay them the proportion of the money he had promised them. It was a fact that, owing to the difficulty of communication with Mazatlan, where De Lagnel's drafts on the company were cashed, he was short of ready funds, but the difficulty was only temporary. He gives the following account of what happened:

"The next morning when the men assembled for payment I was in the store. It was a beautiful bright day. Ordinarily they came in dressed in white, but I noticed on this day, although the day was beautiful and bright, they had their native Mexican blankets thrown over their left shoulders. That, however, did not cause any question in my mind. While I was engaged in writing the tickets, giving them their debit and credit account, with the signs that are used to express dollars and cents, and the balance due them written out so that there could be no doubt as to the balance due, the young clerk who was in attendance at the store was standing then in front of them and I was sitting back of him, said to me, 'Colonel, if you are going to do anything you had better be quick about it.' I asked him what he meant. He said that the fellow who was talking was inciting these men to make an attack upon me, and he told them not to wait. The clerk told me that the man was talking about the Candelaria affair, which had taken place before my time there, I believe. They had risen there and killed some officer and sacked the place.

"What he was saying, as told me by this clerk, was, that if they only had a little pluck and unanimity among them, and made the attack at once, they could clean out the whole establishment. There was some $15,000 or $16,000 of property lying right around them within reach. I told him to keep quiet, and I kept them in view from the table where I was. I then started up from the seat where I was sitting, and that movement they interpreted, I suppose, as an intention on my part to go for the money, because when I made payments I would go to the room where I had the strong box and get the money. I first dispatched Sloan to the superintendent of the company above me and asked him to loan me what ready money he had on hand, so that in case I found I could do it I could make some explanation. He brought $125 or $150. I then went to my room and brought down what little money I had; it did not exceed one hundred and odd dollars, and I also brought down seven six-shooters which I had, with ammunition.

"I then called up the workmen and told them to lock up their tools and put them away, and then put on their six-shooters and come up to the old hacienda. Between that and the store where these miners were assembled was a place about 18 feet long, a court, a closed space between the buildings close by and the stone wall. I told them that I might have trouble; that I hoped not, however, but to see that everything was in order, and if they heard any disturbance to come in and shoot them down as fast as they could. These men came up, as I directed, and the Mexicans saw them come in. There was no demonstration on their part, nor did they cross the court. They staid in the wine room as much out of sight as possible.

"I called the head cleaner, Bartolo Rodriguez, who was the only man I had that I could really trust. * * * He failed me this time in point of courage. That is the only charge I have to make against him. I told him to go out and talk to these men, to tell them the situation; that I had striven to get the money, that their own political difficulties lay in the way. (The French must have been there at that time.) I told him to tell them that I was out of ready money, except a few dollars at the hacienda; that I was willing to pay them altogether their indebtedness in goods and let them go at once, or to pay them two-thirds in goods and give them a due bill for the balance, or if they chose to let the whole of it stand I would settle it eventually, if they chose to settle their accounts in that way.

"I also told him to tell them that I was perfectly well aware of the influences to which they were subjected; that it was the gamblers who wanted their money, and it was the liquor dealer who wanted to sell his liquors to them; that they were persuaded by evil-disposed persons; and that they might feel assured that I would not put myself in their power at that distance from home without support if I intended to do anything but the right with them. But he was afraid to go to them, and I do not think he did anything at all.

"Then one of the men came forward to try and make terms, and endeavored to assure me that these were good people; that they meant no harm; that I must not be frightened, etc. I told him I was not frightened; that my desire was to avoid difficulty; that if we misunderstood each other, I wanted to explain matters; that I would endeavor, as far as possible, to be just and honest with them; that it was my interest to do so; but that if they forced me to extremities, I would deal summarily with them.

"He asked me if I had arms and ammunition. I told him I had plenty; that I had plenty of food to stand a siege and plenty of arms to defend myself with. But I said, 'I tell you if I commence this work I won't leave one of you alive unless you kill us.' I said, 'Go back and try to explain to those men what I have told you, and tell them I mean rightly by them.'

"I then sat down and saw what little money I had and made the distribution. It was very small, but I made the distribution to each, anyhow, and I then called the fellow who was the ringleader. He came up to the counter, when I called his name for payment, in a sort of surly manner, with his hat on his head. Uniformly the custom was for a man when he came for his pay to take off his hat and say Ave Maria. I do not know what they meant by it, except perhaps that it indicated respect and some deference. But this time his manner was surly and defiant. I told him to take off his hat; he removed it. Then I told him that I intended to pay him in full and that he must quit the place at once. I paid him in full and ordered him to cross the stream to the opposite bank, so as to be off the domain where I supposed I had control, and ordered him never to return under pains and penalties.

"Q. Did he obey?

"A. He went off, and I never saw him again. I then called up the rest of the men in turn and paid them. I told them what I had done; that I desired to do what was right and to fulfill my engagements with them so far as I could. I told them at the same time, if they were not satisfied with the condition of things, as it might occur again. I wanted them to quit the place at once. None of them left me. They all stayed. After that I never had any trouble." (Appendix, pp. 72, 73.)

It is clear from this account that if a man of less coolness and courage than Col. De Lagnel had been in charge of the company's enterprise at that time its property might have been sacked and its American employés murdered.

Soto's connection with this "demonstration" is thus described by De Lagnel (ibid., pp. 91, 92):

"Q. I understood you to say that this man Soto was a pestiferous sort of man, or you used some characterizing word?

"A. I considered him so. I thought he was an underhand, a very quiet man. He did not show anything exteriorly, for he was always courteous when I saw him, but I thought he was secretly undermining the whole affair.

"Q. Why did you think that?

"A. I was so informed. I think it was attributed to him and others—the excitement among the workmen when the money gave out, when they came in, each man armed with a machete hidden under his blanket.

"Q. Yes, I understand; but I want to understand what there was that came to your knowledge or came to you in the way of information that satisfied you that he was trying to undermine you in that business?

"A. I do not say undermine. He was exerting an adverse influence. The people left to themselves seemed to be quiet, harmless people, easily aroused and excited, particularly by a man of their own nation as opposed to a foreigner, and I was told that Soto was at the bottom of this affair; that he was inimical to the establishment and to me being connected with it.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Yes; and if anything of that kind came from a government official it would be very likely to excite their animosity and hostility to that company, would it not?

"A. I have no doubt of that.

"Q. Why did you think this came from Soto, that he was the man who was doing it?

"A. Because he kept a store which conflicted to a certain degree with the store at the hacienda. They were only across the roadway, and probably not a hundred feet apart. When I went down I supposed that the domain belonging to the company would be under my control wholly. When I arrived there I found this house up; this man's domicile. He owned the house and I never clearly understood my relations with him, how far I dared with safety to the interests of the company interfere with him. I would rather have had him away entirely, but I hesitated to do anything to militate against the interests of the company. I know he influenced these people, for these weekly entertainments were held in front of his house, and the liquor, the mescal, was sold in his little shop or store."

The letterpress copy book not a fair test.

Although he and the Abra enterprise had such a narrow escape, Col. De Lagnel said nothing about it in his letters to the company; and therefore, according to the doctrine laid down by the committee, nothing of importance in his testimony tending to fasten the responsibility upon Mexico for the company's abandonment of the mines is to be credited unless some account of it is found in his correspondence with the home office. This criterion of the truthfulness of the depositions of the various superintendents is thus expressed in the majority report (p. 11):

"The claimant's memorial, besides charging various specific acts, contains general charges of acts of violence, persecutions, and outrages by the Mexican authorities and people, which are alleged to have so alarmed the employés of the company and to have so interfered with the working of the mines that it became necessary to abandon them. If these allegations had any foundation in fact some statements would undoubtedly be found in the letter book and letters constituting the correspondence between the superintendent at the mines and the company's agents in New York to sustain them. On the contrary, this correspondence shows that from the very beginning of the company's operations it was specially favored by the authorities."

This idea of the committee is expressed still more emphatically and comprehensively on page 7:

"In the opinion of the committee the correspondence between the company's superintendents and agents at the mines in Mexico and the managing agent of the company in New York, accompanying this report, is sufficient, considered alone, to show the whole claim of the company to be fraudulent and the claimant's testimony before the Mixed Commission, so far as it tended to fix the responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government, to have been rank perjury."

The correspondence in question (which is printed in the Appendix, pp. 236-318) occurred between Gen. Bartholow, Col. De Lagnel, and Mr. Exall, who were successively superintendents of the company's mines in Mexico, and Mr. Garth, who was treasurer of the company in New York. It is undoubtedly reasonable to expect that this correspondence will show some of the difficulties experienced by the company in Mexico, growing out of the alleged failure of the Mexican authorities to protect the company's officers and property from illegal exactions and interference, and making it impossible, with any comfort or security, to conduct the business at the mines; but it does not seem reasonable to maintain that nothing tending to make the Mexican Government liable in damages to the company is to be credited, no matter how credible the witness or the statement may otherwise be, unless the fact is specifically stated in that correspondence.

Col. De Lagnel's examination affords an opportunity to test the committee's theory. He was one of the company's superintendents, whose letters from the mines at Tayoltita to the treasurer in New York appear in the letter-press copy book which the Mexican Government has introduced as part of its "newly-discovered evidence." He did not testify for either party before the Joint Commission. The Mexican Government presents him now as a witness on its behalf. His credibility is unimpeached; both sides regard him as honest and truthful. Now, will the committee apply its criterion to Col. De Lagnel's testimony, and brand it as "rank perjury" so far as it tends to fix responsibility upon the Mexican Government for the company's abandonment of its mines, because he never said anything about the "pernicious" Soto, or the armed "demonstration" of the workmen, in his correspondence with the company's agents in New York? Nor does he seem to have said anything in his letters to the home office in regard to the deep-seated hatred and suspicion with which citizens of the United States and the country itself were regarded by the Mexicans—a feeling on their part the extent and intensity of which seems to have surprised him not a little.

Failure to enforce the law proved by a witness for the Mexican Government.

The inability of the local authorities to punish crime or protect property in that vicinity appeared in the testimony given before the subcommittee by another of the Mexican Government's witnesses, Mr. A. B. Elder, who, immediately prior to his employment by La Abra Company, had been mining on his own account at La Puerta, which is about 15 miles distance from Tayoltita. He testified as follows (ibid., p. 569):

"By Senator DOLPH:

"Q. Did you work the mine after that?
"A. I worked the mine not for the company but as an individual.
"Q. After that?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And it was during the time you were working on this mine that the ore was taken?
"A. Yes sir.
"Q. And in consequence of the stealing of your ore you went to the justice of the peace to get him to bring suit against the parties, and he advised you that on account of the condition of affairs it was not practicable, and you quit work on the mine; is that it?
"A. Yes, sir; I quit working.
"Q. On that account?
"A. Because I could not protect myself from the men at that time.
"Q. The authority of the Mexican Government had not yet been established at the time, after the French had left that section of the country?
"A. No, sir.

* * * * * * *

"By Mr. KENNEDY;

"Q. Now, is it or is it not the fact that during the whole of that contest the Mexican or patriot Government had control of the San Dimas mining district; in other words did the French——
"A. The French did get there once or twice.
"Q. Now tell us just when that was.
"A. Well, I could not give you that, Mr. Kennedy; that is, the date I could not fix, because they were back and forth.
"Q. What I want to get at is this: The military operations did not affect your administration of the mines at La Puerta; you were outside of the limits of the active struggle, were you not?
"A. Comparatively.
"Q. And your difficulties came from interruptions to your supplies coming from Mazatlan?
"A. Yes, sir.
"The CHAIRMAN. Military interruption or interruption of robbers, or what?
"A. Military.

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. Now, had the military situation anything to do with the powerlessness of the justice of the peace to give you justice in those complaints that you made against the men who stole your ore; was there any interference of the military with the civil authorities?
"A. It was not the military.
"Q. So that there was nothing in the military situation to explain the trouble you had with the miners at La Puerta?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. And, of course, I need not ask whether it was anything in the military situation that made the men steal the ore?
"A. No, sir." (Ibid., p. 604.)

Mr. Elder had previously testified as follows (ibid., p. 568):

"Q. What is the name of that magistrate to whom you applied?
"A. I can not tell; it was so long ago I have forgotten; they often change down there; each administration has its own officials.
"Q. Did you ask him to try to stop these robberies?
"A. I went to him and told him that they had taken from me probably twenty-five cargas (7,500 pounds) of very fine ore, and I wanted to get an action against them to make them stop taking my ore; and he said, 'The way things are at present, I don't think we can do anything with them.'
"Q. Did he say anything as to what would be the personal results to himself if he attempted to enforce the law?
"A. He said he didn't think it would be safe for him or me to attempt to enforce the law; to attempt to arrest the men."

The following shows how Mr. Elder was treated himself when he was in charge of the company's mill at Tayoltita (ibid., p. 597):

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. * * * Did you not come to my office in Washington, within a few days, and say to me, in the presence of another person there, that you knew that Mexican officers were in the habit of putting people in jail and confining them without any trial at law, and that there was one little black justice of the peace, who went barefooted, that you had known to do such things, or words to that effect?
"A. My recollection——
"Q. The question is whether you said that to me in my office?
"A. My recollection is that he would come and I would have to stop the mill and he would take me about a mile away as interpreter. He did that a number of times.
"Q. You mean by force?
"A. Oh, yes.
"Q. Well, how was the force exerted?
"A. Send a couple of soldiers after me with bayonets.
"Q. Did you ever make any resistance?
"A. I say, 'I can not go; I am running the mill; I will have to shut down.' 'It makes no difference; come along.'
"Q. How often did that happen?
"A. That happened about four or five times.
"Q. What did you say they wanted you to do?
"A. They wanted me to act as interpreter in his court.
"Q. And where had you to go to?
"A. I had to go about a mile above the hacienda to an old village.

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. What hacienda?
"A. Tayoltita.

"By Mr. KENNEDY:

"Q. Do I understand that these occurrences that you mention now happened while you were assayer for La Abra Company at Tayoltita?
"A. Yes, sir."

Seizure and confiscation of the company's mule trains.

The committee's proposition that "the correspondence between the company's superintendent and agents at the mines in Mexico and the managing agent of the company in New York, accompanying this report, is sufficient, considered alone, to show the whole claim of the company to be fraudulent, and the claimant's testimony before the Mixed Commission, so far as it tended to fix the responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government, to have been rank perjury," may also be tested by a comparison between the deposition of Gen. Bartholow, who was the company's first superintendent at the mines, and his letters to Mr. Garth, the company's treasurer in New York.

Gen. Bartholow's testimony was taken for submission to the joint commission on behalf of the company in June, 1874. His letters to Mr. Garth, three in number, were written between February 6, 1865, and April 10, of the same year—a period but little over two months, and it is therefore impossible that they should contain anything like a full account of the occurrences and transactions in Mexico affecting the company during his superintendency, which commenced in the summer of 1865. It is evident that the letterpress copy book does not contain all of his correspondence with the home office, and can not fairly be put in comparison with his deposition, so far as the latter deals with facts that transpired prior to February 6, 1866.

Gen. Bartholow, now deceased, attained his military rank in the war for the Union. He was distinguished and highly esteemed in St. Louis, the senior member of a banking house in that city. The United States commissioner, Mr. Enos Clarke, before whom Gen. Bartholow was examined, certified that Gen. Bartholow was well known to him "as a prominent banker and citizen of the city of St. Louis, a man of responsibility, and of excellent character as a gentlemen of truth and veracity;" and attached to the general's deposition is a certificate of the Hon. Samuel Treat, judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri, that, in his opinion, Thomas J. Bartholow, the aforegoing deponent, personally known to him, "is a prominent banker in the city of St. Louis, in said district, and a gentleman of unquestioned veracity and integrity, whose statements are entitled to the fullest confidence."

In rebuttal of testimony produced on behalf of the Mexican Government, to the effect that the company never owned any mule trains, and hence could have suffered no loss by the capture of its mules, Gen. Bartholow deposed as follows (Appendix, p. 476):

"Two entire mule trains, loaded with provisions and supplies belonging to said company, were captured by the military authorities of the Mexican Republic, and the mules and supplies so captured and taken by force were appropriated to the use of said army, and I never was able to recover any of said mules or supplies, nor did said Abra Company ever receive any indemnity or compensation for the same, although I applied to Gen. Ramon Corona, the chief in command of said forces on the Pacific coast, to restore to the company the property so captured by his subordinate officers, and at the same time implored protection from him against further depredations of that character against the property of the company. He responded to said appeal by referring me to the commanding officer at San Ignacio, Sinaloa, under whose military jurisdiction the property was seized. I visited said commander at San Ignacio, whose name, I think, was Gen. Guerra or Gen. Parra. I do not now recollect which of the two was then commanding at that point. I knew them both, and a number of other officers of said army whose troops had committed similar depredations and had levied other 'prestamos' upon the Abra Company while under my superintendence."

This is a sufficiently definite statement, susceptible of direct refutation if not true. The Mexican agent in Washington, as soon as this deposition was filed, could have taken steps to examine Gens. Corona, Guerra, and Parra, but the testimony of none of these officers was filed with the commission. Gen. Bartholow deposed that he had visited the Mexican commander at San Ignacio, within whose military jurisdiction the alleged capture had been made, to confer with him in regard to restitution or indemnity. Such a statement might easily have been disproved if untrue. The committee brands Gen. Bartholow's deposition on this point as "rank perjury" so far as it tends "to fix responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government" (there seems to be the rub), because "it appears from the letters, copies of which are found in the testimony of witnesses taken before the committee, that the company never owned any mule trains, but that all its transportation was conducted by hiring mule trains owned by Mexicans" (Report, p. 13). If it is Gen. Bartholow's letters, as they appear in the letterpress copy book, that are alluded to by the committee, the answer is that they contain nothing inconsistent with the facts stated on this point in his deposition.

The capture of the mules by the military authorities in the earlier operations of the company would prove to the superintendent that it would be better to hire mules if possible. His letters show how difficult it was to do this, and how the cost of "packing" had risen on account of the frequent seizures of mule trains for the use of the army. It might well be that the packers would insist on some guaranty from the company, and, whether or not the company had any proprietary interest in the mules or was liable to their owners to any extent in case of capture, trains of mules laden with machinery and supplies belonging to the company, and in charge of its employés, might properly be described as "the company's mule trains." What the mules carried was worth far more to the company than the mules, and even delay in receiving supplies and machinery, to say nothing of their absolute loss, would entail large additional expense upon the company and otherwise seriously embarrass the enterprise. An incident of that sort is related in Mr. Clarke's deposition (ibid., p. 368).

In his letter of March 7, 1866, to Mr. Garth, in giving an account of the murder of Mr. Grove, an American employé of the company who had been in charge of one of the mule trains, Gen. Bartholow says (ibid., pp. 247, 248):

"I had nominally purchased a train of pack mules in Mr. Grove's name and sent him to San Ignacio to obtain a permit for them to pack for me and a guaranty that they would not be taken by the army. He succeeded in getting these documents and was on his way home to take possession of the mules and start them to packing. He passed the night previous to his death at the house of one Mellton, at Tachamete. * * * Grove told this man of his purchase of the pack train, and that he was to pay $4,000 for it, and was on his way to take possession of it and start it to work, thus leaving the impression that he had this sum of money with him."

This may mean that that particular train of mules was purchased by the company in Grove's name, the word "nominally" referring to the fact that Grove was merely the nominal owner, or it may mean that the purchase was nominal, i. e., that there was no real transfer of the property from the Mexican owner; but this latter supposition seems inconsistent with what is said about the purchase, the price, and the possession of the pack train. Except for the question of "perjury," it would be a matter of no practical importance whether any of the mules that did the company's packing between Mazatlan or Durango and the mines belonged to the company or not; for nothing was allowed by the umpire on that account. He allowed the company what it actually expended in its Mexican enterprise, and outside of these expenditures the only allowance was for the estimated value of the ore on the patios.

But the proof that, in its earlier operations, the company did own a considerable number of the three or four hundred mules on which its packing was done, is conclusive, and is left untouched by the admitted fact that certain of the mule trains were hired, and that when he retired from the superintendency Gen. Bartholow turned over only twelve mules to his successor.

It seems that there were two captains of mule trains in the employ of the company who were murdered on the road—one William Grove, whose body was found, and another who was "lost and never seen afterwards." This, as well as the reputed ownership of mule trains by the company, appears from the deposition of Juan Francisco Gamboa, who testified (ibid., p. 366):

"I was acquainted with the principal employés of the said company at the time they were in operation at Tayoltita during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and up to the time the company abandoned the said mines, which I think was in the month of March, 1868. I know that some mule trains belonging to the company, which were loaded with a large quantity of provisions and other articles, were taken, and it was said that this was done by the Republican army, but I did not personally witness it. I heard it said at the time of the capture of the mule train belonging to the said company, which was loaded with provisions and other articles for their operatives in the said mines. As the head muleteer was lost and never seen afterwards, it was supposed that he had been killed by those who captured the mules. I also heard of the murder of Grove at a place called Arroyo del Candelero, between San Ygnacio and the company's mines in Durango; but I know nothing personally of the facts of the murder, except from general hearsay."

Gen. Bartholow asserts positively, in another part of his deposition, that the company owned mule trains, and he states the fact and gives the reasons as follows (ibid., p. 478):

"I employed from one hundred to one hundred and sixty mechanics, miners, and laborers, including muleteers, during my superintendence; they were supplied with provisions purchased and packed from the city of Durango and from the valley of Sinaloa to the company's works at Tayoltita. Other supplies, such as powder for blasting, quicksilver, fuze, mining tools, also bacon, flour, and butter, were purchased at and shipped from San Francisco, Cal., to Mazatlan, and thence by pack mules to the company's works aforesaid. The distance from Durango to Tayoltita was 160 miles or more, and the distance from Mazatlan to the company's works was about the same. Some of the provisions used, such as meats, lard, salt, and other small supplies, were purchased for me by my contractors in the valley of Sinaloa, of whom I now recollect José María Loaiza, of San Ygnacio, as one of the principal contractors for making said purchases. The average distance of said valley towns from the said company's works was about 100 miles.

"In carrying on works of that magnitude it was, of course, absolutely necessary for the company to own and work large numbers of mules, which it did, as I have stated. Mule trains furnished the only possible means for the transportation of supplies."

Now, compare these statements in his deposition with the following from the first letter of his that appears in the letterpress copy book, addressed to Mr. Garth, and dated at Tayoltita, February 6, 1866 (ibid., p. 239):

"Mr. Griffith, William Grove (a new man from Saline County, Mo.), and Dr. Hardy have charge of all the pack trains. Each manages and controls a train. This is necessary, for the reason that if some American in the employ of the company is not constantly with the trains there is great danger, if not a certainty, that the animals would be taken by the military authorities; and, besides, I could not get the Mexicans to pack for us unless I agreed to do this; besides, with this arrangement I have a guaranty that my men, animals, and effects will not be interfered with."

Later on, in the same letter, alluding to the great excess of expenses over the estimates, Gen. Bartholow says (ibid., p. 120):

"This difference in estimate is caused principally by the weight of the mill and its cost being first so greatly underestimated, and of course all calculations based upon the weight and cost of the mill in my former estimate are not reliable; and, besides, when I left here for San Francisco, in September (1865) mules could be contracted for to pack at from $8 to $10 per carga, but after the Liberals took possession of the country and confiscated large numbers of mules it was with the greatest difficulty that I could get anyone to agree to pack at all; and had I not succeeded in getting military protection our mill would now be lying in Mazatlan. Had I at the time I agreed to remain in Mexico known that I would have to contend with half the difficulties I have even now encountered I never would have undertaken the task; but as I agreed to do it, my pride is enlisted in the success of the enterprise, and I will see it through if it is possible for energy and industry to succeed."

Gen. Bartholow's revised estimate for the cost of packing was from $16 to $18 per carga, quite double the rates that prevailed before military seizures of mules became so frequent. The increased cost and difficulty of hiring mules may have induced the superintendent to purchase them. His nominal purchase of a mule train in Mr. Grove's name is mentioned in the next letter, already noticed (ibid., p. 247); and in a letter written between these two to his bankers at Mazatlan Gen. Bartholow says (ibid., p. 243):

"On my way home from your city I passed 174 mules loaded with my machinery, about half of which have arrived and the rest will be here to-morrow, when Dr. Hardy will start back with 150 of them, which will be sufficient to transport all I have of machinery and goods left in Mazatlan. This is quite gratifying to me, and to pay the packers I need, in addition to what money I have on hand, at least $2,000 more, and have drawn upon you in favor of Dr. W. B. Hardy for this sum, which draft please do me the favor to honor."

From this it clearly appears that some at least of these 174 mules were hired. But these were by no means all the mules that were carrying for the company. And it will be observed that at that time, February 21, 1866, less than two months before the close of Gen. Bartholow's superintendency, the machinery had nearly all been transported over the mountains to the mines; but outside of the transportation of the machinery there was abundance of work for mule trains, as appears by the following paragraph from Gen. Bartholow's letter of March 7, 1866, to Mr. Garth (ibid., p. 248):

"As I advised you in my last, I have drawn upon you in favor of the Bank of California for $10,000, which draft will go to San Francisco by the steamer of the 16th instant. The most of this money I expect to use in the purchase of salt and corn. Will start the mules now engaged in packing machinery to bringing up these supplies as soon as they arrive with the balance of the mill, which will be in a day or two. When our mill is running, we will not use less than 500 pounds of salt daily, and as none can be packed in June, July, August, and September, and perhaps October, it is absolutely necessary that enough be in store to run us during the rainy season. To keep us fully supplied with this necessary article will require during the packing season a train of at least one hundred mules, and another train of an equal number will be necessary for corn and panoca. All these matters will require constant and assiduous attention from your superintendent, for a failure to obtain an ample quantity of these supplies for the rainy season will not only involve a very heavy expense, but will greatly retard, if not absolutely stop your work. If the latter should occur, you will lose your miners, and much time will be required to obtain a new set, for these men are so improvident that if they are without work for two weeks at a time they and their families are in danger of starvation; then mutiny and revolution is the inevitable result."

It is confidently submitted that there is nothing in Gen. Bartholow's letters inconsistent with what appears in his deposition in regard to the ownership and the loss of mule trains by the company. It is clear that he had expended a very large amount of money in excess of the previously estimated expenses, and it is also clear, as we have seen in Col. De Lagnel's case, that there were things of great importance to the security and eventual success of the company's enterprise that were not reported in the letters which appear in the letterpress copy book. Besides there is no evidence that all the letters that were written by the superintendents were copied in that book; and it has been already noticed that it contains no letters at all during the earlier and greater part of Gen. Bartholow's superintendency.

There is a great body of testimony corroborating in a general way the deposition of Bartholow on this matter and showing that the capture of mule trains and provisions belonging to the company and the collection of "prestamos" or forced loans from its property were matters of general repute in that part of Mexico at that time among people who were not likely to be misinformed. The testimony of two witnesses, Cole and Clarke, who were engaged as forwarders for the company in 1865, 1866, and 1867, will be found on pages 363, 364, and 369 of the appendix; Bouttier's (ibid., p. 380); Avalos's, 356; and Green's, 341. J. M. Loaiza, a Mexican merchant and muleteer, who was employed by the company "in the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and the beginning of 1868," in forwarding its supplies and machinery, sometimes assisting the aforesaid witness, Cole, and was familiar with its operations, after testifying to its reputed losses from seizures of its mule trains by the Liberal forces, continued as follows (ibid., p. 378):

"I know that they took, as I have stated, one of the trains which was carrying provisions for the company, and it is also supposed that they robbed it and killed the muleteer, as he has never been heard of since.

"This depredation occurred while Thomas J. Bartholow was superintendent of the company, at the end of 1865, or the beginning of 1866. A short time afterward one Grove, the muleteer of another train, employed by the company, was found brutally murdered by the people of the country, on the road to the mines where he was going, at a place called 'El Arroyo del Candelero,' between San Ygnacio and San Dimas, where his body was found horribly mutilated."

Exall's depositions before the Joint Commission compared with his letters and explanatory affidavit.

The opinion of the majority of the committee that "there was no forced abandonment of the mines" is based upon an alleged conflict or want of coherence between Exall's depositions before the Joint Commission and his letters to Mr. Garth as they appear in the company's letterpress copy book. This opinion is stated in the report (pp. 8 and 9) as follows:

"Exall, the last superintendent, was the only witness before the Commission who pretended to give the circumstances of the forced abandonment of his own knowledge. Exall's deposition is completely overthrown by his own letters. Months before he left Tayoltita he informed the officers of the company in New York that the mines were not yielding any ores that it would pay to reduce; that he was out of funds and pressed on all sides with debts, and that unless relieved by remittances of money from New York he would be compelled on that account to abandon the property. Finally, January 24, 1868, he wrote to the treasurer in New York that unless he received money by the steamer of the next month he would be compelled to come to New York and lay the embarrassed situation of the affairs before the company. It also appears that about this time Exall talked publicly concerning his intended visit to New York. The original and the press copy of the following letter to the single remaining employé at the mines has been produced before the committee:

"'TAYOLTITA, February 21, 1868.

"'Mr. JAMES GRANGER:

"'SIR: As circumstances are of such a nature as to compel me to leave for San Francisco, and probably for New York, to inquire into the intentions of this company, I place in your hands the care and charge of the affairs of the La Abra Silver Mining Company, together with its property.

"'You are invested hereby with all power confided in me, of course acting in all your transactions with an eye to the interests of the company.

"'This will, to you, should occasion require it, be ample evidence of the right possessed by you to act in their behalf.

"'Very respectfully,

"'CHARLES H. EXALL,

"'Administrator La Abra Silver Mining Company.'

"The date fixed by Exall, in his deposition before the Commission, of his expulsion from the mines was on or about March 20, 1868. An original letter of Exall's was produced in evidence before the committee, dated at Mazatlan (the seaport, 150 miles from the mines), March 15, 1868, which shows that he had been at that place some days when the letter was written, and that he had left the property and mines in the quiet possession of Granger, his assistant; that he was on his way to San Francisco and New York to obtain money from the company to pay the overdue salary of himself and his assistant, Granger, and that he expected to return."

In his first deposition, which was made nearly two years after he left Tayoltita, Exall says that he "can not state dates and names with any degree of certainty." It does not appear that he kept a diary, and it does appear by the letterpress copy book and otherwise, that he left the company's books and papers at the hacienda when he abandoned the mines. Testifying from recollection, it would not be strange if he were a week out of the way in regard to the date of his departure from Tayoltita.

But it is evident that Exall's depositions, filed on behalf of the company with the Joint Commission, and the letters alluded to in the majority report, furnished different if not inconsistent causes for the abandonment of the mines; and the difference is so remarkable that if not explained it would justify a grave suspicion of Exall's sincerity; nevertheless, even if unexplained it could hardly overcome the great body of testimony, partly furnished by witnesses who testified on behalf of the Mexican Government to the continued interferences, annoyances, and wrongs of which the company was the victim in Mexico, and which, it is claimed, led to the abandonment of the enterprise. An explanation of the difference between his deposition and his letters was made by Exall in writing, under oath, on the 1st of May, 1878, and was received in evidence by the subcommittee on the afternoon of Wednesday, February 27, 1889, but no mention whatever is made of it in the majority report, which is likewise silent in regard to the "newly discovered evidence" impeaching the conduct of the Mexican Government in its efforts to subvert this award.

Before considering Mr. Exall's explanatory affidavit, it ought to be observed that it was never claimed by him in his deposition, or by the company in its memorial, that he was driven out of Tayoltita by any riotous uprising (although there had been such uprisings or "demonstrations") or by any open attack upon the hacienda, or any one public act of violence, either on the part of the authorities or people. But it was claimed both by him and the company that by a persistent and long-continued course of illegal interferences and impositions, accompanied by acts of violence, with the connivance of the local magistrates, and the refusal of the higher authorities to afford protection or redress, it was made impossible for the company to conduct its business or retain possession of its property at Tayoltita.

In his first deposition, after giving an account of his arbitrary arrest and imprisonment, in regard to which the evidence has already been collated in this report, Exall refers as follows to the situation after the French army had retired from Mexico and the Liberal party had come into power (Appendix, p. 337):

"Indeed, it was even worse in the mines, for then they seemed to turn their whole attention to what they called a purpose on our part to annex Durango to the United States. And it was in vain that we protested that we had no such intention.

"The report had become general, and we were so harassed that it was impossible to continue our work with safety, as I have before stated."

It will be remembered that Col. De Lagnel, in his testimony before the subcommittee on behalf of the Mexican Government, testified to the excitement produced at the mines and throughout the district by the story of Gen. Butler's alleged designs upon the State of Durango.

Recurring to the company's experience before the withdrawal of the French troops, Exall says (ibid., pp. 337, 338):

"The military under Maximilian frequently captured our mules and stores in the same way, and shamefully abused our men who were conducting the trains. They assigned as a reason for so doing that we, the said company and its employés, were Republicans and hostile to the interests of their so-called Imperial Government, which was true. And so, between the two fires, we had no protection, neither of the contending parties respecting our rights under the law but both of them robbing us. Large quantities of silver ore was taken or stolen from our mines after we had taken it out, and such were the threats against us that we did not dare to go out and defend it, as we would have been in great danger of losing our lives by so doing. The ores so taken were of the very richest."

Further on he says (ibid., pp. 459, 460):

"Said Judge Guadalupe Soto, and the prefect, Marcos Mora, encouraged this spirit among the men and incited them to riot by telling them, falsely, that the company came there to annex Durango and Sinaloa to the United States, and they ordered all the men whom I did employ to quit work, which nearly all of them did do frequently for weeks at a time, paralyzing the works and the business of the company, so that I sometimes had but few men at work, and the men who did work had to so manage the same as to deceive the prefect, or keep the fact from his knowledge that they were still working for the company; and on one occasion Aquilino Calderon attempted, notwithstanding this order, to work at the mine "El Cristo," but thereupon he was by force of arms compelled by said judge and prefect to quit the company's service, and they, the said prefect, Mora, and Judge Soto, infused the same hostile feeling into the whole mass of workmen, and said Mora and Soto issued the written communications or orders to me, which are referred to in said defensive testimony, requiring me to employ all the men and work the mines as Soto and Mora directed, or to abandon them to the people to be worked by themselves as they pleased; but those written orders were mild compared with verbal orders given me by said officials from time to time, and finally the last order or warning by the prefect, Olivera, notifying me to abandon the works and leave the country, which forced the abandonment of the company's works and mines.

"It was but a foregone conclusion with said authorities, as from their words and actions I felt, weeks before that time, that the abandonment was inevitable. The local authorities and other politicians urged the workmen to hostile demonstrations, and at one time they charged upon the hacienda and broke in the doors. This state of hostile feeling continued, and said turbulent characters continued to harass the company in its operations, and when, soon afterwards, Macario Olivera, Soto's son-in-law, became prefect, matters grew rapidly worse, so much so that only a few nights before I escaped, an attack was made upon the hacienda of the company by some men headed by said prefect Olivera himself, as I was informed the next day by one of the friendly Mexican workmen, a muleteer. They were armed with pistols and machetes, but as I had been previously warned of it by said friendly muleteer, I was in some measure prepared for the attack, and after they discovered my position and strength they retired for that night.

"Soto and Olivera both told me that unless I employed all the men who were out of work in that district, which they knew was utterly impossible, that they would let the working people drive the company out of that district and give them the mines to work as they pleased. Their verbal orders to me were much more pointed, emphatic, and hostile, than anything they wrote me. They were working openly and covertly to get us out, and to escape as much of the responsibility as possible for so doing."

Now, it is claimed by the committee, in the majority report, that although this testimony (and there is much more of it, giving the details of other annoyances and injuries) is confirmed by numerous witnesses, some of whose depositions were taken and filed by the Mexican Government, nevertheless it is not to be credited, because certain letters written by Exall to Garth show that Exall was short of money, and could not carry on the company's works without remittances from New York, which the treasurer refused to send. It will hardly be denied that two causes for abandoning the company's business might coexist and coöperate, each one of which might be conclusive.

The business might be abandoned because it was unprofitable—that is, because the ores could not be reduced at a profit—or the business might be abandoned because of such illegal interferences and want of proper protection as the umpire found from all the evidence to have been proved in this case. The financial straits of the company would be no excuse for such wrongs, nor an available defense for the Mexican Government, except perhaps in mitigation of damages.

And the fact that the company abandoned its valuable improvements, as well as its mines, supports the theory that the abandonment was caused by a conviction on the part of the company that it could neither conduct its business nor hold its property in Mexico on account of the alleged interferences and want of protection. Furthermore, the evidence seems to warrant the belief that the company in New York could have readily obtained all the capital that might have been needed, if its directors could have given any assurance that property was safe and the laws reasonably well enforced at the mines.

In answer to a question why he and the company did nothing further after the abandonment, Exall answered (ibid., p. 338):

"Because I did not dare to return and resume mining operations there. I was and am satisfied that I could not do so with safety to the life of myself or my workmen, or with safety to the property of said company, such was the hostile feeling or prejudice against said company, as citizens of the United States, and further prosecution by said company of mining operations there, both on the part of the citizens and the local and national authorities of the Mexican Republic, and the violent acts resulting from that feeling and prejudice, being encouraged and connived at by said authorities as I have stated. And I returned to the State of New York and advised said company that it was useless to attempt any further working of said mines, and gave them the facts above stated as my reason for that advice; and I understand that said company was so advised by others, who were citizens of Mexico."

Recurring now to Exall's explanation of the difference between his depositions and his letters, it appears from the testimony of Mr. Ely, who was examined by the subcommittee in the afternoon of February 27, that while on a visit to Washington he had seen certain copies of letters alleged to have been written by Exall as printed in a pamphlet or petition which had been prepared by Gen. James E. Slaughter in the interest of the Mexican Government, and was in circulation among members of Congress in the spring of 1878, and that when he (Ely) returned to New York, he made search for the company's correspondence, and not being able to find it, he sought an interview with Exall, and asked him whether he had ever written such letters as those that had been published by Gen. Slaughter, and, if so, whether the facts therein stated were true. The following extracts from Mr. Ely's examination by the chairman of the subcommittee shows what passed between Mr. Ely and Mr. Exall before the explanatory affidavit was made (ibid., pp. 949, 950):

"Q. Well, what I wish is a statement of your best recollection of all you said to Exall in respect to those letters—the whole of it. Just go right through now and state it in your own way.

"A. I stated to him that there appeared to be certain letters from him written to Mr. Garth as treasurer of the company, and that those letters contained statements in them that the ores at the mines in Mexico were of little value; that there had been no trouble down there with the authorities; that he had been embarrassed for want of funds—well, I can not give you it in much more specific form than that. The general upshot of it was that the company was without valuable property down there, and that his letters tended to show it; and that they were without means down there, and that his letters tended to show that; and that there was no difficulty with the people about titles or anything else of that kind, or any abandonment; that he had written to Mr. Garth that if he did not intend to let the property go to the dogs down there he must send some money.

"I can not remember all I said, nor give you now anything nearer to it than that; that I certainly said to him the statements in those letters, if those letters were written by him and the statements were true, conflicted with the statements that he made in his depositions for the company, and that if those were his letters, and the statements were true, I wanted to know it; and that if they were not true I wanted him to tell me what his explanation of them was, if they were his letters. That is as near as I can now tell you, Mr. Senator, about this. I have no doubt that I gave him something more, particularly of the expressions in the letters, but I conveyed to him the impression as strongly as I could that those letters, in my opinion, went counter to his affidavits, and I wanted to know what the truth was about them.

"Q. I suppose that, as a lawyer, you selected out the points that you thought were the most essential for him to reply to?

"A. Well, it showed most conclusively that his depositions would not be true if the letters were true.

"Q. And you stated to him what these points were, in the language of the letters, as you saw them in Slaughter's petition?

"A. No, I did not use the language of the letters, except that I jotted down a few expressions that struck me as peculiar.

"Q. Well, can you recall any of those expressions?

"A. One was about its 'going to the dogs;' did not want the property to 'go to the dogs' struck me as a peculiar expression and made an impression upon my mind; and send him some money; wanted to know the intentions of the company in regard to it, and another thing is there is no difficulty about titles or anything else; it was only money.

"Q. Did you inform Exall that his letters, if genuine, contradicted his deposition given before the Commission?

"A. I suppose I did that, yes; in this way: I told him if these letters were genuine, or if the statements in them were true, that then they conflicted with his depositions."

Exall's explanatory affidavit is printed on pages 943-945 of the appendix. It shows that shortly after he arrived at Tayoltita he came to the conclusion that it would be impossible, on account of the state of the country and the hostility of the local authorities, for the company to retain possession of its property and carry on its business of mining; and that he entered into a scheme or plot with James Granger, which is stated as follows (ibid., p. 943):

"We saw that if the company was actually expelled, as we were certain it ultimately would be, we might not, and most probably would not, be able to secure the property, as it would probably fall into other hands; but if the company could be induced voluntarily to abandon the property before matters culminated in an expulsion, or to part with it for a small consideration, we could probably retain the possession and secure the property to ourselves and due protection (Mr. Granger being an English subject).

"The company was already somewhat disappointed because more rapid progress had not been made at the works and in reaching money results, and somewhat dissatisfied with being drawn on by the superintendent for more money. We thought that the state of affairs at the works could, from time to time, be so presented to the company as to induce the feeling we desired, and concluded to act accordingly. * * * In my letters to Mr. Garth, treasurer of the company, written from time to time, I purposely dwelt upon and exaggerated the necessities and the exigencies of the situation, and belittled the value of the mines and ores, and gave to the letters a discouraging aspect. I also wrote to him about my arrest and the threats made to me, and the difficulties and obstructions generally which I met with from the Mexican authorities and people."

It has already been observed that the letter-press copy book contains copies of letters in regard to the need of money, and the impossibility of continuing the company's operations without it, but no copy of any letter, except the one addressed to the prefect, in regard to the "arrest" and the "threats," or (later than July 13, 1867) in regard to "the difficulties and obstructions from the Mexican authorities and people" referred to by Exall in this affidavit. Perhaps he did not copy his letters to the home office on these subjects. Be this as it may, they do not appear in the letterpress copy book, the incomplete character of which has already been noticed. Superintendent Bartholow's earlier letters are all missing. One of these he alludes to in his letter of February 6, 1867, as having been written about the first of the previous month. He also alludes in his letter of March 7, 1867, to his "last"—an earlier letter which does not appear in the copy book—in which he says he informed Mr. Garth that William Grove was missing, and that it was feared he had been waylaid and murdered. Nor are the dates in the copy book consecutive (ibid., pp. 313-317).

Exall denies in his explanatory affidavit that he ever delivered the letter of February 21, 1868, to Granger, turning over to him the care of the property, and explains how that letter came to be written (ibid., p. 944):

"Mr. Garth wrote such answers to my letters as I assumed they would call forth, and from the answers it seemed evident that the company would not be unwilling to enter into some arrangement to part with their property; and in the latter part of February, 1868, I concluded to go on to New York and see what could be done to that end.

"Preparatory to so going I drew a paper addressed to James Granger, which purported to invest him with my authority and to give him power to act for the company. I had no power to confer, being only an acting superintendent, nor authority to confer such power if I had any; but it was necessary for the purposes we had in view that he be in possession, and that he should seem to Mexicans to have the proper authority. Had I gone then, I intended to return. But I reconsidered my decision to go at that time, and concluded I ought to remain longer before going, and await still more alarming indications from the people and authorities, and the paper I have referred to was never delivered to Granger. Whether I destroyed it or left it among the loose and discarded papers at the hacienda of the company I do not remember."

He then continues as follows:

"I remained there some time afterwards, but I waited too long, and the explosion which I believed to be several months distant came unexpectedly, and the expulsion of the company, and my abrupt departure to save myself from personal harm, and the complete abandonment of everything belonging to the company took place as I have stated in my deposition."

He adds that he still hoped that Granger, instead of some Mexican, would get the possession of the property, but that he was afterwards informed that Judge Soto, the father of Granger's wife or mistress, took possession of and occupied the company's hacienda. He then says:

"I returned to New York and informed the company of its expulsion and of my forced abandonment of all its property, and gave them a full history of the state of their affairs and of the feeling in Mexico against them. The company seemed to think the case was hopeless."

The affidavit closes as follows:

"I speak of my letters from general recollection of them only, but the foregoing is a correct history of the origin and purpose of all letters I have ever written which contain anything inconsistent with my depositions. They were written for the express purpose of enabling Granger and myself to obtain the possession of the company's works and mines in the contingency which I have mentioned, and were known to and largely prompted by Granger, and, in fact, partly drafted by him, and in so far as they conflict with my depositions the letters are untrue, and every material statement in my depositions is true."

The question arises whether there is anything in the evidence, outside of this sworn statement, to show that Exall really exaggerated the financial difficulties at the mines and belittled the value of the ores in those letters of his to Garth. It does appear that Exall received no remittances from the company during the whole term of his superintendency, which lasted from April, 1867, to March, 1868; and that the only draft he ever undertook to draw upon the company—the one for $3,000 mentioned in his letter of July 13, 1867, to Mr. Garth—was not negotiated (ibid., pp. 307, 309). It also appears that on the 1st of July, 1867—eight months before the abandonment—he had a cash balance of $1,733.58 on hand at Tayoltita, and that the company at that time owed its American employés $1,070.46; C. Sandoval, for charcoal, $46.59, and Echenique, Pena & Co., at Mazatlan, for money borrowed and merchandise, $2,094.70, making a total indebtedness of $3,211.75, and leaving a deficit of $1,478.17. (Ibid., p. 306.)

From this time till the abandonment Exall paid all the running expenses of the mines and the works and the hacienda out of the returns from the mill. He also settled with Cullins, to whom the company owed $1,492, but he says in his letter of December 18, 1867, that he borrowed that amount (ibid., p. 313). If he did, he subsequently repaid it, for he left no debts unpaid at the mines or in Mazatlan, except arrears of salary due to Granger and $250 borrowed from Pena & Co. A. B. Elder testified that he and other employés of the company were paid in full when Exall returned from one of his trips to Durango (ibid., p. 582).

Mexican witnesses accuse him of squandering the products of the mill in gambling (ibid., p. 521), and seem to intimate that bullion was "disposed of" improperly by Exall and Elder (ibid., p. 417). This may refer to the fact stated in Exall's affidavit that he shipped bullion clandestinely to New York and San Francisco instead of sending it to the mint at Durango (ibid., p. 944). The statement in his second deposition that he extracted $17,000 worth of silver from 20 tons of ore (ibid., p. 462), which has seemed so incredible to the Mexican Government and the majority of the committee, receives considerable color of probability from Gen. Bartholow's letter to Mr. Garth, of March 7, 1866, in which the general makes the following statement (ibid., p. 246):

"From 'La Luz' we have taken out 400 tons, and the quantity mined weekly has been increased to an average of 30 tons, and at the same time we have succeeded in reducing the cost delivered on the patio to $15 per ton. In this mine we have found a small vein, an offshoot from the main vein, which is now about 6 inches wide, which is producing with two hands (no more can be worked in it) from three to four hundred pounds per week of ore of surprising richness. If the opinion of the Mexicans, including Don Ignacio Manjarrez, is worth anything, these say it will yield $1 to the pound. I think this is an overestimate, but I would not be surprised if it should assay $1,000 to the ton. I have put up about 2 pounds of it, which I will send with this letter by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express. On its receipt I would be glad if you would have it assayed and report the result. This ore we put up as fast as mined in gunny sacks and store it in the wareroom."

Another rich "find" was made under Col. De Lagnel's superintendency, to which he alludes in his testimony before the subcommittee, as follows (ibid., p. 54):

"I remember the wild excitement among the miners, because when the ore was brought down you could see the gold in streaks as large as a big diaperpin head little pellets of gold along like fine shot, so as to leave a line of gold.

"Senator BROWN. That, then, was very rich gold ore?"

"The WITNESS. I took it for granted that that was rich ore. All the miners seemed to be in a state of excitement. They found it out by sinking a shaft, I think for ventilation or for the easy dropping of the ore, or some such purpose as that, from the upper level, I forget just what, and in that way they found this valuable ore."

Mr. Elder testified that he made assays of ore at La Puerta for Col. De Lagnel previous to June, 1866. It may have been some of this ore that gave the following satisfactory results (ibid., p. 509):

"Q. Just tell us what assays you made for him before you went to Tayoltita?

"A. He came to my place with some ores and asked me to make assays for him. I did so, and I got very fine results, about $250, and as much as $600 that day from those ores."

If these rich "finds" were all stored in the warehouse in gunny sacks, or kept, as ordinary prudence would require, in some safe place by themselves, there must have been a lot of high-grade ore on hand, and it was probably from this that Exall got such results after the mill was running and after De Lagnel had left Tayoltita; for there was only one "run" of the mill while De Lagnel was superintendent, and that was made just before his departure for New York, from 10 tons taken promiscuously from the large piles on the patio (ibid., pp. 36, 37).

It also appears that Exall must have incurred legal expenses to a considerable amount, for he employed one of the most distinguished lawers in Mexico, Mr. Jesus Chavarria, to appeal, on several occasions, to the State government, on behalf of the company, for the protection and redress which had been denied by the local authorities (ibid., top of page 389).

It therefore seems clear from the evidence, outside of Exall's explanatory affidavit, that he did exaggerate his financial difficulties and belittle his re, sources in the letters which he wrote to Mr. Garth after July, 1867. He seems also to have invented dangers which did not exist, for we find him saying to Mr. Garth on the 6th of October, 1867, that "amparas are not now granted, and mines are to be held only by working;" and yet, eight days later, he applied to the president of the mining deputation of the district of San Ygnacio (apparently with success) for an amparo for six months on the mines Arrayan, Sauz, and Talpa (ibid., pp. 310, 312).

Shortly after this, on November 8, 1867, Granger writes to Garth that Exall had left Tayoltita on the 26th ultimo with bullion for Durango, in company with Mr. Sloan and two mozos, and that it was reported that the party had been met by a band of robbers and that everything was taken from them (silver, mules, arms, etc.), leaving them in their underclothing to make their way into the city, about half a day's journey (ibid., p. 312); and on the 18th of December Exall writes to Garth "for God's sake" to telegraph to the Bank of California and pay De Lagnel's draft, so as to stop the threatened suit (ibid., p. 313), although two months previously he had explained to Mr. Garth that "there was a flaw in the draft," De Lagnel having failed to sign as superintendent, thus "making it an individual affair" and preventing a seizure of the company's property (ibid., p. 310). In his last letter to the company's treasurer, which appears in the letterpress copy book, dated at Mazatlan, January 24, 1868, Exall raises this same alarm again, and says that he has been doing everything in his power "to keep the Bank of California from getting possession;" that he has thus far succeeded, but "can prevent them no longer," and fears that "they will eventually have their own way."

Meanwhile his difficulties with the local authorities were increasing and their aggressions growing more intolerable. Judge Soto had denounced the lower hacienda and had taken possession of it and set men to work on it, although the company had intervened by Exall to protect its property, and no decision had been rendered by the courts. Exall's letters to the prefect at San Dimas show that he had appealed to Judge Perez at Tayoltita against Judge Soto's illegal action, and although Perez decided that Soto must suspend work, Soto continued his operations, and Exall afterwards learned that Perez had told Soto privately to go on with his work, "which he did," and thereafter "continued working." The two local magistrates seem to have combined to break the law and seize a part of the company's property. It also appears from the same letter (ibid., p. 314) that Soto claimed that he was working by authority of an order from the prefect at San Dimas—the same official before whom Exall's appeal was pending and to whom the letter in question was addressed. In a letter written the same day to Castillo de Valle, December 5, 1867, (ibid., p. 315) begging his good offices in this matter, Exall expresses his fear that the local authorities had committed themselves to Soto, and shows what a serious injury Soto's proceedings were and would be to the company.

It matters little that when the case was carried to the State courts of Durango the decision was eventually against Soto. The company was virtually in the power of the local authorities at Tayoltita and San Dimas, and all their arbitrary and illegal acts were known to the populace and were productive of hostility and opposition to the company and contempt for the law. Following this trouble with Soto came the arrest and imprisonment of Exall by Soto's associate, Judge Perez, under the circumstances already described, and this was afterwards followed by a judicial "demonstration" against Exall, in the presence of the workmen, at which he and the company were threatened with expulsion from the mines. These judicial assaults seem to have culminated in a warning given by Olivera, the prefect at San Dimas, to Exall in person, that his life was not safe at Tayoltita, and that if he consulted his safety he would abandon the mines. (Ibid., pp. 460–462.)

The company's case does not depend on Exall's depositions.

Having considered the evidence tending to show that Exall did really exaggerate the company's financial difficulties at Tayoltita in his letters which appear in the letterpress copy book, as stated in his explanatory affidavit, it now remains to inquire whether there is evidence, in addition to what has been already quoted or referred to, showing that the causes to which he ascribed his abandonment of the mines and the works of the company at Tayoltita, in his depositions before the Joint Commission, did really exist. It will be noticed that his explanatory affidavit closes with the statement that in so far as they conflict with his depositions the letters are untrue, and every material statement in his depositions is true. The grounds for the abandonment of the mines, as stated in Exall's depositions have already been noticed in this report. It is now proposed briefly to collate the evidence which was before the umpire on this branch of the case, and has not been hereinbefore noticed.

The Mexican prefect, Mora, who was examined on behalf of the company, being questioned as to his predecessor, Quiros, and his successor, Olivera, and particularly as to their disposition towards La Abra Company, answered (ibid., p. 393):

"That neither of them were satisfied with the laws given by President Juarez, inviting foreigners to come to the country, and although those persons might have obeyed them it was against their own wishes; that they not only showed their unwillingness to do so, but in various ways tried to molest them and force them to leave the place."

As to the company's fruitless appeals to the State authorities for protection, the same witness testified (ibid., p. 395):

"That lawyer Chavarria informed him that the Abra Mining Company, at the time referred to in the question, employed him and Mr. Rice, the former as lawyer and the latter as attorney in fact of the company, to make a complaint to the governor, Gen. Francisco Ortez de Sarate, of the damages and persecution which the company were experiencing at San Dimas, and asking him for protection; that at the time the governor sent for deponent, and questioned him with regard to the company; that the deponent informed him that it consisted of Americans, and, like all other foreigners, was working for the ruin of Mexico; he refused it the protection which it prayed for."

In regard to the stealing of the company's ores and failure of the local judges to protect the company from these depredations, Mora testified (ibid., p. 394):

"That during the time of his administration he had no knowledge of the theft of the ores referred to in this question, but he did hear it stated that during Olivera's time the Mexican operatives, who were absolutely without work to maintain themselves, stole some of the company's ores, and that neither Quiros nor Olivera would listen to any complaints, made on account of the said robberies, by the company's superintendent."

Avalos, when he was examined on behalf of the Mexican Government, subsequent to his deposition for the company, testified that it was true that the company had been prevented by the people from working. Extracts from his testimony on behalf of the company have already been given.

In his first deposition for the company, James Granger testified as follows (ibid., p. 356):

"Q. Were any of the authorities, local or national, civil or military, in the mining regions of Mexico, in favor of extending protection or security to American companies engaged in working said mines?"

"A. No, sir; they are bitterly opposed to it; as I have before said, they are all in favor of seeing the mines of Mexico in the hands of, and worked by, Mexicans. I have heard the two prefects of San Dimas, that I have named, Marcos Mora and Macario Olivera, say so while they were officiating as prefects there, and I have often heard Judge Guadalupe Soto, of Tayoltita, say so. The last-named authority I have heard say much more on the subject, as applied to 'La Abra Silver Mining Company.' * * * That he would go for clearing them out if they attempted to return to work their said mines at Tayoltita. I know that this was, and is now, the feeling there with higher Mexican authorities than Guadalupe Soto in that district.

The same witness testified (ibid., p. 357) that at that time, May 14, 1870, the principal hacienda and buildings of said La Abra Company at Tayoltita were occupied by the said Guadalupe Soto and his family, and that his office was then "gefe de Cuartel." Granger said that he had been at Tayoltita himself "but a few days ago." Avalos also testified in May, 1870 (ibid., p. 358), that the company's hacienda and property at Tayoltita were occupied at that time by Judge Soto and his family.

Alfred A. Green, who, since the award in favor of La Abra Company was rendered, has been employed by Gen. Slaughter under his contract with the Mexican Government to obtain testimony impeaching the award, testified in New York on behalf of the company in December, 1869. In that deposition he says (ibid., p. 241):

"I know the mines called 'La Abra,' in the State of Durango. It is situated at Tayoltita, in the same district of San Dimas. I also know 'La Abra Silver Mining Company,' the company that owned and worked said mines

'La Abra.' * * * In January, February, and March, 1868, I was frequently at said mine 'La Abra.' * * * In January, 1868, at San Dimas, I heard some Mexican citizens, in the presence of the 'juez' of that place, declare that they would kill or drive away all the men of that company, and the threat was applauded by the 'juez.'"

The same witness testified in regard to the stealing of ores, and the feeling of general hostility on the part of the authorities and people as follows (ibid., p. 342):

"After the expulsion of said 'La Abra Company,' which I have mentioned, in March, 1868, Mexicans were engaged in carrying off its ores, and it would have been impossible for the company to have returned and continued its mining operations. Any persistent attempt to do so, I am sure, would have only resulted in the killing of the superintendent and his officers.

"My long residence in Mexico, and my ability to converse in the Spanish language, and the interest which I had taken in the liberal cause, and services I had rendered it, which were well known in the State of Durango, enabled me to mingle freely with the inhabitants, and for a long time, and until a short time before I was driven away from San Dimas, I was regarded by most of the Mexicans more as one of them than as a foreigner, and matters were talked of by the citizens before me as freely as if I had been a native-born Mexican, and I know well the state of feeling of the citizens of the State of Durango and the Mexican authorities, civil and military, against foreigners in general, and citizens of the United States of America (or Americans as they are called) in particular, at and subsequent to the commission of the acts against said 'La Abra Silver Mining Company,' which I have mentioned. It was very bitter, and ended in open hostility and violence. The report was industriously circulated that the object of the Americans, and especially 'La Abra Company,' was to annex Durango, Sinaloa, and other border States to the United States of America. Such, I know, were not the views or aims of Mr. Exall nor of other Americans in charge of neighboring mines, whom I knew. The report was circulated to inflame the more ignorant classes. The real object, it was evident, was to get the possession of the mines and property of the American companies and the benefit of their expenditures.

"On several occasions, in January, February, and March, 1868, in San Dimas district, I have heard Mexican citizens and authorities say that they meant to drive off and kill out all the Americans, and get their mines and property.

"This feeling of hatred and hostility was shared by the military authorities and soldiery, and by the local civil authorities, and was encouraged by them. It grew in intensity and boldness until it culminated in open violence and forcible dispossession of 'La Abra' and other companies. Several other American companies, besides La Abra, were driven off in a similar way. Any attempt to obtain restitution or protection from the authorities was vain, and only increased the personal danger. * * *

"From my knowledge of the feelings of the citizens and authorities in San Dimas and the situation of affairs there and from my own case I am confident that after the acts against said 'La Abra Company' any effort on the part of said Exall, or of anyone else for the said company, to continue mining operations would have resulted in his or their death by violence."

It appears in the "new evidence" offered by Mexico (Ex. Doc. No. 103, p. 287) that while the Joint Commission was in session the Mexican Government obtained (or now alleges that it obtained) a deposition of William R. Gorham, in March, 1872, stating that the deposition of the aforesaid Alfred A. Green, from which the foregoing extracts are taken, "was not read to said Green nor signed by him." Now, although Gorham's deposition was not submitted to the Joint Commission, nor any evidence tending to impeach the authenticity of Green's deposition, Gorham's deposition has, nevertheless, been printed by Congress as part of Mexico's "new evidence." Nor has the Mexican Government availed itself of the opportunity afforded by the Senate to produce Green before the subcommittee and examine him in regard to his deposition or the matters of which it treats. He is still living, and, as has been stated, has been in the employment of the Mexican Government, under Gen. Slaughter, endeavoring to collect evidence in Mexico to impeach this award. His conduct in that employment will be noticed hereafter in connection with the recent testimony given before the subcommittee on behalf of the Mexican Government by Capt. Charles B. Dahlgren, who also had made a deposition, in favor of the company, which was filed with the Joint Commission.

Perhaps the reason why Gorham's affidavit stating that Green had never signed his deposition was not submitted to the Joint Commission was the fact that an affidavit of the same Gorham was attached to Green's deposition certifying that Green had made it, and that it was "entitled to full faith and credit" (ibid., p. 344). Gorham's affidavit would not do for the Joint Commission, but it has been available, with other false and defamatory matter of the same sort, as will be shown hereafter, to swell the volume of the so-called "newly discovered evidence" presented by the Mexican Government to the State Department and Congress for the purpose of subverting this award.

Recurring again to the testimony corroborating the company's memorial and Exall's depositions, attention is invited to the deposition of Carlos F. Galan, which was taken in January, 1874, in support of the claim of James Tobin vs. The Republic of Mexico, and submitted also in this case. Mr. Galan was a cadet of the military college of Chapultepec, a lieutenant in the Mexican army throughout the war with the United States, subsequently a member of the bar in Sinaloa and Lower California, and, after holding various positions of honor and trust in the latter Territory, its governor and chief justice. He resided at Mazatlan from 1859 to 1872, where he was an interpreter and translator of the English, French, Spanish, and Italian languages, and publisher of the newspapers Occidental and La Voz del Pueblo. His testimony relates mainly to the difficulty of taking depositions in Mexico before the Mexican authorities in behalf of claimants, citizens of the United States, under the treaty of July 4, 1868, and his account of the efforts of high officials to intimidate Mexican witnesses and prevent their testimony from being taken in support of American claims, and to suborn testimony in opposition, shows a signal disregard of law and justice in quarters where it would not be expected. His testimony in regard to the forcible seizures of property by the military, the levying of "prestamos," and the illegal and tyrannical conduct of the civil authorities during the time that the company was conducting its operations in Mexico and subsequent thereto is as follows (ibid., pp. 497, 498):

"Q. What officers of the army under Gen. Corono were authorized or allowed to exact and collect such 'prestamos,' or forced loans, from foreigners?

"A. All officers on duty, from major-generals down to lieutenants, and I have known of cases there where noncommissioned officers and private soldiers of that command exacted and collected such prestamos, with or without the authority of their superiors in command. Such cases were common and an everyday occurrence during the late wars there, not only during the time covered by the questions, from 1863 to 1867, but even up to the day I left that country, in May, 1872, such exactions were still made and enforced in that military department by said authorities.

"Q. How do you know or how were you made acquainted with the facts stated by you in answer to the foregoing question?

"A. By living within the military jurisdiction of Gen. Corona during the time referred to, and by listening to the statements of the military officers of the Republic, many of whom often stated to me that they were ordered by their superior officers in command to make such demands, and to seize, for the use of their troops, all or any provisions or supplies found with anyone, or any money, goods, chattels, or other things of value, which could be converted into money or supplies for the army, in case they should refuse or neglect to pay such prestamos; and in many cases the said military authorities of the Republic seized and converted to their use the goods, provisions, and other supplies needed by the army, without stopping to make said exactions or of going through the form of levying prestamos. I know the facts, too, by conversing with the sufferers, soon after the depredations were committed there, some of whom were broken up and ruined in their several enterprises, of which Gen. Corona was the chief.

"Q. Will you please name some of the foreigners of Sinaloa and Durango who have suffered heavy losses, or ruin, as stated by you, on account of said acts of the Mexican military authorities?

"A. Yes; I know a Spanish house, in Mazatlan, that of Echeguren Harmanos & Co., late 'Echeguren Quintana y Co.,' who have suffered in this way, i. e., by such prestamos alone, exacted by said military authorities, and the payment enforced from them, to the extent of nearly or quite a quarter of a million of dollars, during the time referred to; and I know of many other foreign houses there who have been compelled by said authorities to pay large prestamos for the support of said army, amongst whom I will name 'Echenique Pena y Co.,' 'Careaga y Co.,' 'Storzel Bartning & Co.,' 'Melchers & Co.,' John Valcke, and 'Kelly & Co.,' and amongst the American miners, farmers, and manufacturers who have suffered in the same way, many of them having been broken up and entirely ruined by the said acts of the military combined with the prefects of the districts and other local authorities, I will mention the 'Trinidad & San José Silver Mining Company'—John Middleton, of this city, Charles Bouttier, a partner of the above, whose brother, Leopoldo, the superintendent of their mines, actually died from the effects of his imprisonment, who was maltreated and abused in nameless ways while a prisoner, because he had the misfortune to have been born in France, which facts I learned from the Mexican officers themselves; George Briggs, a farmer; one Mr. Elliott; Alfred Howell, a manufacturer at Mazatlan; the 'Carmen Mining Company;' Daniel Green, of this city; John Cole, of Camancho, near Mazatlan; 'La Abra Silver Mining Company,' and James Tobin, this claimant."

John P. Cryder, who was employed as assistant superintendent of the Guadalupe Gold and Silver Mining Company, about a league from Tayoltita, from the last of December, 1867, to the 1st of March, 1868, remaining there until the close of that month, and who was frequently at the company's hacienda, and "intimately acquainted with Mr. Exall," testified as follows (ibid., pp. 375, 376):

"I heard said local judge, Nicanor Perez, say he would 'run that La Abra Silver Mining Company out of Mexico.' He said that 'the mines of Mexico belonged to Mexicans,' and that his Government had no right to permit the 'Gringos,' as he called Americans 'to come here and carry off all the best of their metals,' and that the people,' he said, 'would take care that the ores of La Abra mines don't go away in the hands of these Gringos,' and he, the judge, Nicanor Perez, would see that the people of Mexico shall have the benefit of these locos' ('fools') investments.

"I recollect that his remarks were made in a prejudiced and determined manner, and in the form of a threat, that he would encourage any act, if necessary, to carry his point against that company, and I so understood it and communicated the facts to some of the American employés there. This was in February, 1868. I afterwards told Mr. Exall of the threats of the juez.

"I also heard Macario Olivera, the prefect or gefe politico of the district of San Dimas at that time, February or March, 1868, say that 'La Abra Silver Mining Company could not stay in that district;' that 'it would be impossible for them to do so.' This was at San Dimas. He did not say positively what course he would pursue, but he said the authorities were determined to get rid of that company, and they could not stay there and work those mines; he said it would be better for that company to give up their mines and leave the country 'before any accident should happen,' for which, he said, 'the prefect would not be responsible.'

"I asked him what he meant by making use of the word 'accident' in that conversation, and he made an evasive reply, which satisfied me that mischief was meant, either by the prefect himself or by the people or local authorities, with the acquiescence of said prefect. This said Macario Olivera was, at the time this conversation took place, February or March, 1868, the official and acting prefect of that district. He was called 'gefe politico.' The gefe politico of a district, in any part of Mexico, is the chief authority, civil, military, and political. I know a man must possess great nerve if he dares to oppose the will of the 'gefe politico' in any district of this country. The intimations of difficulties or 'accidents' made by said gefe politico against La Abra Silver Mining Company were made in the presence of two or three Mexicans, who evinced immediate approval of said remarks, and considerable of feeling. My suspicions were at once aroused that Superintendent Exall might be in great danger, and that other 'accidents' might happen, and I told Mr. Exall the first time I saw him after this conversation I have related with said prefect."

It will be remembered that Cryder was an eyewitness of Exall's imprisonment, and that his testimony regarding that occurrence has already been quoted.

The deposition of Mr. Jesus Chavarria was taken on behalf of the company at Durango, July 11, 1872, before Pedro J. Barraza, first judge of letters. A certificate of this judge is attached to the deposition, stating that lawyer Jesus Chavarria is "a resident of this city (Durango), one of its first lawyers, and, by his dignity and well-known integrity, is, beyond all doubt, entitled to full faith and credit."

The whole of Mr. Chavarria's deposition should be carefully read. He testified as follows (ibid., p. 387):

"That in July or August of 1867, the year referred to in the question, he was at San Dimas on private business, and also at Tayoltita, as he has before said; that he went to the mines for the purpose of seeing them, and that he conversed with the gefe politico upon their condition; that in consequence of these he became satisfied that both that officer and the mining people were strongly bent upon annoying and driving the Abra Company away, and with which they were continually provoking quarrels; that officer and some of the workmen stated that they believed the company to be annexionists; that it was therefore hateful to Mexico, and they thought it best to drive it away from that mineral anyhow; that, for this purpose, the authorities instigated the laboring people, on the pretext of their wants, not to work for the company; that he further knew that the company's ores were frequently stolen, and that it was not legally protected by the Gefetura, where the superintendent usually made fruitless complaints of the thefts; that that officer [the gefe] also gave him, deponent, to understand that he had a special interest in the expulsion and despoliation of the company, in which case he intended to denounce the mines at Tayoltita, and he offered deponent a share in them, which deponent refused, and reproved his conduct in permitting the operatives to steal the ores, which they did with impunity, to the great responsibility of the authorities of that department, who, either by their connivance or indolence, compromised the honor and good name of the Republic."

It will be remembered that Marcos Mora, who was at that time about to retire from the office of prefect, was the author of the order to the company which had previously been mentioned, and that it was under Mora's authority and an "uprising of the people" that Soto sheltered himself for the orders which he had issued to the superintendent of the mines.

It appears that Chavarria had an interview with the incoming prefect, who proved himself a worthy successor of Mora and a fitting ally of Soto. Mr. Chavarria says (ibid., p. 388):

"That he met Macario Olivera on the road from San Dimas to Gavilanes; that they conversed together upon the subject referred to in the question, and Olivera acknowledged to him the plans and intentions existing at Tayoltita, on the part of the authorities and the operatives, to injure and expel the Abra Company from their mines by intrigues, or such direct and indirect means as it would be impossible for them to resist, and that Olvera revealed to deponent that he was interested in that hostility, and in combination with the gefe politico, whom he was going to replace, to carry out the sinister projects before referred to."

Mr. Chavarria gives the following account of a meeting of the company's Mexican workmen at the house where he and Mora were stopping at Tayoltita (ibid., p. 388):

"11. State whether Marcos Moro, the gefe politico, was visited on the second night of their stay at Tayoltita, in July or August of 1867, at the house where they were stopping, by any of the employés of the Abra Company, or any of the head Mexican workmen who had been in the employ of the company. Also, state all that then and there took place between the said employés and the gefe, Mora, as to their continuing in the company's service; state what the parties named did and said in your presence.

"A. That all the matters referred to in the question are true; that the greatest disorder prevailed upon that occasion; that the head miners, by order of Marcos Mora, mutinied against the Abra Company and the superintendent; they refused to work any longer in the mines, which resulted in the continuance and increase of the robbery of the ores, which was openly carried on in daylight, and in the presence of the superintendent."

Chavarria also testifies as to what Olivera and Mora told him in Durango, after Exall had abandoned the company's mines and works at Tayoltita, in regard to the cause of the abandonment (ibid., p. 388):

"12. State whether, at Durango or other places, you have had any conversations with the said gefe politico, Marcos Mora, or his successor, Macario Olivera, since the month of March, 1868, touching the reasons why the Abra Silver Mining Company abandoned their mines and property; and if so, then state all that the said gefes politico told you, and others in your presence, prior and subsequent to the abandonment of the mines, which may throw any light on the subject of the abandonment, and the manner in which this was brought about.

"A. That subsequent to the time referred to in the question he conversed with Macario Olivera, in Durargo, and also with Marcos Mora, on his frequent visits to him when he was in prison, and was told that the company had finally been compelled to abandon their mines at Tayoltita, through the loss of their property, owing to the concerted hostitity against it in March of 1868."

Mr. Chavarria also testified of his own knowledge to the failure of the appeals which he made on behalf of the company to the national and State authorities for protection against the wrongful acts of the local magistrate at San Dimas and Tayoltita (ibid., pp. 388, 389):

"15. State whether the protection of the national and State authorities was duly and legally invoked on behalf of the Abra Silver Mining Company, at the end of 1867, to protect it against the unlawful attempts made against it and the robbery of its property by Mexicans at the instigation of the gefe politico of the district and the local authorities at Tayoltita. If this be so, then state how you learned the facts. Who was employed by the company as its agent to represent the facts to the authorities? Who was employed and acted as the company's attorney at the time the said protection was invoked? State what was told him, and what was done in his presence by the national and State authorities when the said protection was asked for and in reply to his petition.

"A. That the matter stated in this question is true in all its parts; that deponent, employed by Mr. Rice of California as Exall's lawyer repeatedly solicited from the State government protection for the Abra Company, to suppress the robberies and outrages which the company were experiencing at Tayoltita, but all to no purpose, as, after innumerable steps and measures, the executive of the State never even so much as requested the authorities at San Dimas to comply with their duties. The only answer given was, that the government of the State, at whose head was Francisco Ortez de Zarate, in 1867, would not meddle in private matters."

This corroborates Mora's testimony, already quoted, on the same subject, and, with the testimony of the company's employés, conclusively establishes the allegation of the memorial and justifies the umpire's conclusion that the company was denied due protection in Mexico.

Mora was afterwards imprisoned for malfeasance in office and Olvera was killed in a riot among the miners.

Proof that an immense quantity of ore was stolen.

Further testimony could be cited sustaining the allegations of the company's memorial and of its last superintendent in regard to the stealing of the ores, both before and after the abandonment. The witness, Cole, testified that he had "frequently seen them (the Mexicans) packing off said ores from the works of said company, in sacks upon mules' backs, in March, April, and May, 1868" (ibid., p. 363), and, as already noticed, Mexico's subagent, in her proceedings to subvert the award, Mr. Alfred A. Green, who was at Tayoltita in January, February, and March of that year, testifies to the same effect. But there is a mathematical demonstration of the truth of the company's claim that the best of the ores that were abandoned have been removed since the abandonment. The quantity of ore left on the patios when the property was abandoned has been estimated by some of the witnesses for the Mexican Government as high as from 10,000 to 14,000 cargas. This was the estimate of Mr. Jesus Torres (ibid., p. 443).

No witness makes the quantity less than 700 or 800 tons. The umpire found the quantity to be 1,000 tons. One of the three witnesses brought up by the Mexican Government from Mexico in the recent investigation testified before the subcommittee that the pile of ore at the hacienda was "the same size the last time he saw it as it was the first time;" that "there is about 500 or 600 cargas;" that he first saw it when he "went to work in the mines." This was in 1871, as fixed by the date of the denouncement of "Rosario," including "La Luz," the mine referred to by the witness (Francisco Torres), which he worked in partnership with James Granger, in whose name the denouncement had been made (ibid., p. 335). Jesus Torres swore that when the company abandoned the mines in March, 1868, there were from 10,000 to 14,000 cargas of ore (most of it he said was worthless rock) at the hacienda. Francisco Torres swears that in 1871, about three years subsequent to the abandonment, there were only 500 or 600 cargas left. What had become of all the rest?

The report of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-ninth Congress.

A careful examination of the evidence which was submitted to the Joint Commission both on behalf of the company and the Mexican Government, and of the testimony recently taken by the subcommittee, has led the undersigned to the conclusion so forcibly expressed by Representative, now Senator, DANIEL, in his report from the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, of December 5, 1886, against any revision or disturbance of La Abra award. The House committee's report seems all the more impressive because it affirms the power of Congress to make provision for a judicial investigation of the award, as provided in the bill now under consideration (S. 2632), but concludes upon the merits that the award should not be reopened. The letter-press copy-book and Exall's letters were carefully examined, and their authenticity was not questioned by the committee. The report disposes of this feature of the case as follows:

"Superintendent Exall's contradictions of his testimony as revealed in his letters, now produced for the first time, are given great importance, and stress is laid upon them as imputing that his testimony was false and the claims of the company purely pretentious.

"It should, however, be remembered that Exall was acting for his own interest, and that his letters conformed to what that interest seemed to require. He was a creditor of the company. He was in Mexico, and needed money, and as an inducement to the company to send him money he apparently colored the facts he recited in his newly-presented letters under the impulses of the moment, and described conditions to suit his necessities. We can not justly hold the company responsible for his course any more than we could justly hold a nation responsible for the conduct of a traitor. True, his testimony is apparently discredited, but he is dead, and explanations which, if living, he ought to make are now impossible. But, did this case rest upon his testimony, it would be nevertheless discredited, and in our opinion it should be disregarded; and, disregarding it, there is an abundance of sound testimony to sustain the award."

The explanatory affidavit made by Exall shortly before he died, and which is now in evidence and has been considered at length in this report, was not before the House committee, the original having disappeared from the files of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom it had been presented in August, 1882, and an examined copy not having been produced and proved till the recent investigation. (Appendix, pp. 939-941.)

The grounds on which the House committee reported against any interference with this award are summarized by Mr. DANIEL as follows:
